INTRODUCTION

BY JOSEPH A. DeBOER

It is probably true that Vermont, as nearly as any spot upon the earth's crust, has been the scene of the most conspicuous action by men in all efforts to create, maintain, and advance a true independence of person and state and upon principles fundamentally included in the term self-government. In fact, its history, upon utmost analysis, discloses that no people organized as a state have more nearly attained to perfect sovereignty or maintained it under their constitution and political methods than the people of Vermont. The original stock, according to a census more than a century old, was composed almost wholly of English and Scotch, and was, therefore, Anglo-Saxon in its quality. That carried with it, considering only insignificant changes in its character, the virtues of their institutions, language, and literature, and, what is equally important, however derived, the fine character of Anglo-Saxon intellectual and moral life. Vermont in the American Revolution had reason for, and might have profited by, serving England; but its people, under a lofty leadership, saw fit to espouse the cause which, under Providence, has led to stupendous advances in the history of civilization and created a nation which outruns all others in its achieved results for man. Its people came of stock which held education, religion, freedom of person, and honest dealings in chief regard, and they were ready, in sustaining these assets of sovereignty, to sacrifice all.

Joseph Allen De Rose.

From thence followed the conquest of the wilderness, the long-continued political strife with neighboring states, and finally with Congress itself, and from thence also came the glorious contribution which Vermont men made to the success of the Revolution by which the nation was established. The same spirit, animating the children of these forbears, sustained the subsequent wars of the United States and contributed materially to the existing unprecedented position of our common history in the world at large. In fact, Vermont has been an extraordinary up-builder of the nation because of the intrinsic character of the people who compose it, their patriotism, thrift, and self-sacrificing works, and chiefly because they always made education and religion and fair dealing, as defined by laws and interpreted by courts, the basis of their public life.

For this reason any work which preserves the biography of some of its people in even partial form is valuable and useful. As Stafford says:

*“Mother of men, whom the green hills enthroned,
From whose bright feet the rivers haste away,
These of the ages are—we of a day,
Yet we have loved thee, and thy love have known.”*

This work of Vermont biography has been undertaken with a view of supplying a useful contribution to the history of the state; and it is hoped that it will serve the purpose of all such works, that of conserving state traditions and of advancing the future, not only of Vermont, but of the nation at large.

Montpelier, Vt., April 15, 1912.

THE FOUNDERS

The men of Vermont in the beginning came for the most part from Massachusetts and Connecticut. They were of the true pioneer type—strong, determined, enterprising men, who, with little of this world's goods, sought cheaper lands in the uninhabited Green Mountain wilderness, under grants from Benning Wentworth, the royal governor of New Hampshire. The first settlements of any importance were made after the close of the French and Indian war. France had ceded her American possessions to England, and the frontier English settlements were no longer in danger of being harassed and destroyed by predatory expeditions from Canada. Yet the new settlers in what is now Vermont, though they were thus freed from any fear of French aggression, soon found themselves in trouble with men of their own race. These troubles arose from the uncertain and often conflicting boundaries assigned to the various colonies by their charters from the crown. On the one hand, New Hampshire interpreted her charter as giving her all the territory as far west as the western boundary of Massachusetts and lying between the Massachusetts line on the south and Canada on the north. New York, on the other hand, claimed the Connecticut River as her eastern boundary, under the grant of the Province of New York made by Charles II to his brother, the Duke of York. Although, with the exception of Long Island, she had never taken actual possession of any part of Connecticut or Massachusetts under this grant, yet now, after the lapse of a century, she asserted her right to the territory of the present Vermont, and obtained a royal order which confirmed her claim.

By this time there were twoscore or more of scattered settlements in the southern part of Vermont, on both sides of the main range of the Green Mountains; and, under ordinary circumstances and with fair treatment, it would probably have made little difference to the inhabitants of these remote hamlets to which of the two jurisdictions they should be attached. But New York, not content with the royal decision in favor of her territorial claims, began to treat the new settlers with signal injustice. She not only declared the grants obtained from the governor of New Hampshire void and worthless, but she demanded that the settlers repurchase their lands under New York titles at a price many times the price they had already paid into the New Hampshire treasury. Some complied unwillingly, especially on the eastern side of the range. By far the larger part, however, refused, and declined to acknowledge the authority of New York; and, when that province attempted to enforce its demands, they resisted openly and for the most part effectively. Since New Hampshire afforded them no protection, they banded themselves together for their own defense into the organization known as "the Green Mountain Boys." Then for a dozen years there followed a desultory but prolonged conflict between this handful of rude frontiersmen and mountaineers and the officials of the great Province of New York. The latter endeavored to dispossess the recalcitrant settlers from their homes, granting their lands over their heads to subjects of New York. But the settlers on the whole held their own well, using not only armed resistance on occasion, but other effectual means as well.

They applied beechen rods, or "the beech seal," as with grim humor they termed them, to the bare backs of individual offenders to good purpose. By one means or another they succeeded in defending their homes and their property, until at length the conflict was interrupted by the breaking out of the Revolution.

Perhaps the most important effect of the long controversy had been the gradual creation of a community of feeling and a political solidarity among the people of the Grants. Unaided by New Hampshire, in open conflict with New York, they had been without any settled system of government. Threatened by a common danger, however, they had, through the agency of committees of safety acting in harmony with one another, of informal meetings, and of delegated conventions from the several towns, been slowly welded into a people. In January, 1777, a convention, meeting at Westminster, passed a "Declaration of the Independence of the New Hampshire Grants," declaring them to be "a free and independent state," under the name of New Connecticut. In June of the same year, when Burgoyne was moving southward along the Champlain valley to effect a junction with Clinton on the Hudson and thus cut off New England from the rest of the colonies, an adjourned meeting of the same convention, held at Windsor, changed this name to Vermont, at the happy suggestion of Dr. Thomas Young, of Philadelphia, a friend and correspondent of the Allens and of other leading men in the Grants. The following month, a constitution for the state was adopted, courts were established, and a council of safety appointed to direct affairs until the new state government could be put into operation, which was done in March, 1778, with Thomas Chittenden as the first governor.

Meanwhile, Vermont had taken its part in the defense of the colonies. On the morning of May 10, 1775, a party consisting chiefly of Green Mountain Boys, under the command of Ethan Allen, surprised Fort Ticonderoga, capturing more than a hundred cannon and a large quantity of ammunition and other military stores. This booty was later of great service to the American army besieging Boston. On the next day, Crown Point was captured by Seth Warner, and Skenesborough, now Whitehall, by Capt. Samuel Herrick. During the following autumn and winter, the Green Mountain Boys took part in an invasion of Canada, which began with much promise of success, but ended disastrously, Allen being made a prisoner and sent to England. In 1777, Seth Warner covered the American retreat before the advance of Burgoyne from Canada, and fought the battle of Hubbardton on Vermont soil against a much larger force of British troops. At the suggestion of the Continental Congress, Vermont, notwithstanding her meager population, furnished a regiment for service in the Continental army; and, on Aug. 16, 1777, Vermont and New Hampshire forces, commanded by Gen. John Stark, won the battle of Bennington, which seriously crippled Burgoyne's army and hastened his surrender at Saratoga two months later. Yet, in spite of her services to the common cause, Congress, largely through the efforts of the New York delegation, refused repeatedly to accede to Vermont's petitions for admission to the Union as a separate state. New Hampshire, too, revived her claims to Vermont territory; and Massachusetts laid claim to the southern portion of the state. Vermont retaliated on two several occasions by annexing bordering towns in both New Hampshire and New York. These East and West Unions, as they were known, were finally abandoned; but at least one session of Vermont's legislature was held on the New Hampshire side of the Connecticut.

In addition to refusing Vermont's appeal to be recognized as an independent state, and seriously considering her partition among the adjoining states, Congress withdrew all Continental troops from Vermont's borders, leaving her frontiers defenseless against British attack, at a time when a fresh invasion along the Champlain highway was being organized in Canada. It was at this juncture, in 1780, that overtures were made by British emissaries for Vermont's return to British allegiance. The correspondence which ensued was conducted on the British side largely by General Haldimand, lieutenant-governor of the Province of Quebec, and is known as the Haldimand correspondence. On the Vermont side, it was conducted by, and known only to, a few of the leaders of the new state. That these men ever seriously contemplated a surrender of the state to the royal authority no one now believes, although Ethan Allen, angered at a fresh refusal of Congress to admit Vermont, once rashly declared that he would rather submit to the crown than fall under the dominion of New York. Abandoned, as they practically were, by Congress and the Continental army, facing in their defenseless condition the danger of a hostile invasion from the north, their object in thus parleying secretly with the enemy was to gain time and to protect themselves. They not only succeeded in this, but they saved the whole northern frontier of the country. Their chief representative in these negotiations was Ira Allen; and it was due to his adroit diplomacy and to the shrewdly noncommittal nature of his replies to the British advances that for three years an invading army was kept hanging idly on our borders, until at last peace was declared between England and her former colonies.

Yet Vermont's continued endeavors to be enrolled among the original states of the Union were in vain. For fourteen years she existed as practically an independent republic; and it was not until 1791 that she was finally admitted as the first new state to be added to the original thirteen.

HEROES OF EARLY VERMONT HISTORY

ALLEN, ETHAN. Born Litchfield, Conn., Jan. 10, 1737; son of Joseph and Mary (Baker) Allen; died Burlington, Feb. 12, 1789. In 1762, married Mary Bronson of Woodbury, Conn.; she died in 1783; they had four daughters and one son, of whom only the second daughter, Lucy Caroline, had issue, she marrying in 1789 Judge Samuel Hitchcock of Burlington; from her is descended, among others, the Hon. Ethan Allen Hitchcock, United States minister to Russia 1897, ambassador to Russia 1898, later in which year he became secretary of the interior, serving as such under Presidents McKinley and Roosevelt until 1907. In 1784, Ethan Allen married Mrs. Frances (Montresor) Buchanan, daughter of Capt. John Montresor of the British army, and widow of Capt. John Buchanan of the British navy; they had three children, of whom the eldest, Fanny, died a nun in a convent at Montreal, P. Q.; after her is named the Fanny Allen Hospital near Burlington. The two sons of this marriage graduated from West Point and became officers in the United States army.

Allen came to the Grants in 1769, and almost immediately became prominent in the struggle against New York. He had been here but a few months when he was appointed an agent to defend the New York suits against the settlers, and went to New Hampshire to obtain copies of Governor Wentworth's commissions and instructions from the king. He engaged Jared Ingersoll of Connecticut as counsel, and in June, 1770, appeared at Albany to answer in a suit of ejectment by a New York claimant against a settler. The judge, Livingston, was a patentee under New York grants, interested directly or indirectly in 30,000 acres in Vermont. Most of the attorneys and court officers were similarly interested, and a fair consideration of the case was out of the question. Allen's documents and deeds under New Hampshire authority were excluded as evidence, and the verdict was against him as arranged. Afterwards some gentlemen called on him at his hotel, and, representing how desperate the case was, urged him to go home and advise his friends to make the best terms they could. He coolly replied, "The gods of the valleys are not the gods of the hills." Asked his meaning, he told them that if they would come to Bennington it should be made clear. He was offered land grants for himself and appointments to office under New York authority if he would use his influence, which was already recognized to be considerable, to support the New York side; but he spurned every attempt to induce him to betray the cause which had been intrusted to him.

Then began the long struggle against the jurisdiction of New York, during the first few years of which, after New Hampshire had abandoned them, the settlers were practically without government, except such as they improvised for their towns, acknowledging no other authority except such as they agreed to among themselves for mutual protection. The sheriff of Albany County repeatedly came with posses of from 300 to 700 men to dispossess the farmers, but always without success, doubtless because the bordering people of New York, from whom the posses had to be recruited, had no heart in the work. Allen was the leader of this resistance before and after it took organized form. When a military organization was formed, towards the close of 1771, and Allen was elected colonel, with Seth Warner, Remember Baker, Robert Cochran, Peleg Sunderland, Gideon Olin, and others as captains, this regiment took the name of "Green Mountain Boys," in derision and defiance of Governor Tryon of New York, who had threatened to "drive the settlers from their farms into the Green Mountains." They repeatedly drove off the New York authorities. They protected one another from arrest.

They took in hand and disciplined anybody that ventured to survey or occupy lands under New York titles. Their method was generally that of the "beech seal," or, as Allen humorously described it, a "chastisement with the twigs of the wilderness, the growth of the land they coveted."

The New York government, thus beaten at every point, in the winter of 1771-2 offered a reward of £150 for the capture of Allen and £50 for Baker and the others. Allen, Baker, and Cochran promptly met this with a counter proclamation, dated at Poultney, Feb. 5, 1772, reciting that "whereas James Duane and John Kempe of New York (prominent lawyers and advocates of New York's claims) have by their menaces and threats greatly disturbed the public peace and repose of the honest peasants of Bennington and the settlements to the northward, * * * any person that will apprehend these common disturbers shall have £15 reward for Duane and £10 for Kempe."

In the opening days of the Revolutionary struggle Allen was among the most active of the patriots. He early dispatched messengers with characteristic letters, to win over the Indians to the side of the colonies, or at least to neutrality, and thereby he did an important service which was felt throughout the war. Many of the red men were induced to come to Newbury, some to settle and some to enter the colonial service as scouts and spies. Some were sent to Washington's camp, and some went to Canada, where they procured information that was highly valued by Washington and Schuyler. After hostilities had actually begun with the battles of Lexington and Concord, and the colonies were fully launched into armed resistance against the mother country, plans were at once proposed for the taking of Fort Ticonderoga and the other strongholds on the Champlain highway, along which any British invasions from Canada must necessarily come. Here again, Allen and his followers were in the lead. Early in May, a party of Green Mountain Boys were already assembled at Castleton for this enterprise under Allen's command, when a small force arrived from Connecticut and Massachusetts; also, Benedict Arnold, with a commission from the committee of safety at Cambridge, Mass. Under this commission Arnold arrogantly claimed command of the expedition. The dispute for a time threatened to wreck the project. But the men from the Grants refused to serve under any leaders but their own; and Allen finally averted the difficulty by agreeing that, while he should command, Arnold might accompany him at the head of the attacking party.

There was some confusion, and a partial miscarriage of plans to provide boats for crossing the lake; and, as dawn began on the morning of May 10, only 83 men had crossed, while Seth Warner, with the remainder of the 270 men composing the expedition, was impatiently waiting on the Vermont side. Allen saw that no time was to be lost. He drew his men up in line, told them it was a desperate attempt that was about to be made, and gave all who wished the privilege of withdrawing, but asked those who were willing to follow him into the fort to poise their fire-locks. Instantly every fire-lock was poised. "Face to the right," he cried, and he marched the men in three files, himself at the head of the center file, to the gate. A sentry at the wicker gate snapped his fuse at Allen, who pursued him with upraised sword into the parade ground of the garrison. Allen then formed his men so as to face the two barracks, and ordered three huzzas. Another sentry, who had slightly wounded an officer with a bayonet thrust, and been struck in the head by Allen's sword, begged for quarter, which was granted on condition that he show the way to the quarters of the commanding officer, Captain Delaplace, which were in the second story of a barrack. Allen strode up the stairway and summoned Delaplace to come out instantly or the whole garrison would be sacrificed. Delaplace appeared at the door, trousers in hand, and asked by what authority the demand was made, eliciting the reply, "In the name of the great Jehovah and the Continental Congress." The dazed commandant began further parley, but Allen, with drawn sword, and voice and manner that admitted of no trifling, repeated his demand for an immediate surrender. Delaplace complied, and ordered his men to parade without arms. All were treated by Allen with characteristic generosity, but as prisoners of war. The capture was made on the very day of the first assembling of the Revolutionary Congress. It was the first surrender of the British flag, and had a great effect on the spirits of the country.

The capture was followed by a rapid succession of brilliant strokes. On May 11, a detachment under Capt. Samuel Herrick captured Skeenesboro and the royalist Major Skeene, and seized a schooner and several bateaux there. Warner with a detachment of one hundred men was dispatched to Crown Point, which he captured the same day, with thirteen men and sixty-one pieces of cannon. Allen and Arnold with their schooner and a bateaux sailed for St. Johns, where on the 18th Arnold, who in the schooner had outsailed Allen in the bateaux, captured a British armed sloop which was lying there. Thus, the whole of Lake Champlain within a little more than a week had fallen into the hands of the Revolutionists. With Ticonderoga were taken without a blow, not only a fortress that had cost Britain years of struggle and vast expenditures of blood and treasure, but stores of incalculable benefit to the army near Boston, including one hundred and twenty iron cannon, fifty swivels, ten tons of musket balls, three cart-loads of flints, a warehouse full of material for boat building, and a large quantity of other supplies and material.

Allen proposed at once to follow up his success with the capture of Canada, which was almost depleted of British forces, there only being about seven hundred regulars in the province, a large part if not an actual majority of whose people were ready to rise in sympathy. He wrote to Congress May 29: "The Canadians (all except the noblesse) and also the Indians appear at present to be very friendly to us; and it is my humble opinion that the more vigorous the colonies push the war against the king's troops in Canada, the more friends we shall find in that country." He offered to "lay his life on it" that "with fifteen hundred men and a proper train of artillery," he would take Montreal. Then "there would be no insuperable difficulty to take Quebec." Lake Champlain, he shrewdly argued, was "the key of either Canada or our country, according as which party holds the same in possession and makes a proper improvement of it. The key is ours as yet, and, provided the colonies would suddenly push an army of two or three thousand men into Canada, they might make a conquest of all that would oppose them."

Allen flooded the Continental Congress and the provincial Congresses of New York and Massachusetts with letters and petitions and arguments in favor of his project. He and Warner went to Philadelphia and Albany to urge the scheme on the continental and provincial Congresses. They were received with considerable honor at both places, though they were still placarded as outlaws by the New York government. The result, after long urging, was that the New York Congress, on the recommendation of the continental body, authorized the raising of a regiment of Green Mountain Boys for service in the Continental army, to be commanded by officers chosen by themselves. Allen proposed himself as commander of this regiment, and he was greatly mortified when a committee of towns met at Dorset, July 27, 1775, to choose a lieutenant-colonel to command the regiment, and elected Seth Warner by a vote of 41 to 5. Notwithstanding the high merit as an officer always displayed by Warner, it is difficult to account for this action, in view of Allen's recent achievements, the large capacity he had shown, and the unanimity with which he had been regarded as the leader only a few weeks before. Allen himself, in a letter to Governor Trumbull of Connecticut, attributed it to "the old farmers who do not incline to go to war," saying he was in the favor of the officers of the army and the young Green Mountain Boys. He still hoped, however, to get a commission from the Continental Congress. Remember Baker, Thomas Cochran, and Peleg Sunderland, who had been captains in the Green Mountain Boys from their organization, and who were on Allen's proposed list of captains for the new regiment, also failed to be elected.

Meanwhile, Allen's efforts had borne fruit, and in view of her defenseless condition it was decided to send two armies into Canada before reinforcements could arrive from England. Arnold was to go by way of the Kennebec, Schuyler and Montgomery by way of Lake Champlain and the Richelieu. Allen, who had naturally regarded himself as the logical leader of the enterprise, was not even included in the list of officers. When, however, Schuyler invited him to accompany the expedition, with the understanding that he should be regarded as an officer, and have command of detachments as occasion required, he accepted. Schuyler sent him on several expeditions "preaching politics" and extending the work he had so hopefully begun of arousing and organizing the people of Canada into support of the Revolution. He met with sweeping success; the Canadians guided and guarded him through the woods; enthusiastic crowds greeted him in the villages; the Caughnawaga Indians, some of whom had been among the British skirmishers, sent him assurances that they would not take up arms on either side. September 20 he wrote to General Montgomery that he had 250 Canadians under arms, and that he could raise one or two thousand in a week's time, but would first visit the army with a less number and if necessary go again recruiting, and he added: "I swear by the Lord I can raise three times the number of our army in Canada, provided you continue the siege."

While returning to camp, as he had written to Montgomery, Allen met Maj. John Brown, who was at the head of a force of about two hundred Americans and Canadians, and a plan was concocted between them and their officers to surprise and capture Montreal. Brown was to cross the St. Lawrence above the city and Allen below on the night of Sept. 23, and at a signal of three huzzas they were to attack simultaneously. Brown, for some reason never explained, failed to fulfill his part. Doubtless some unforeseen obstacle prevented, for he was a brave and capable officer; but he was killed at Stone Arabia, in the Mohawk valley, in a battle with the Tories and Indians, Oct. 19, 1780, and his story about the Montreal attack was never told. Allen crossed over with his force of 110 men, according to agreement, taking nearly the whole night for the task, as he had but few canoes. When he failed to get the signal from Brown, he concluded to stand his ground, as he could not get off over a third of his force at a time, and the enemy would surely discover the attempt. So he dispatched a messenger to Brown and to L'Assomption, a French settlement where lived a Mr. Walker, who was on the side of the patriots, to hurry on assistance. Allen's hope was to hold his ground until aid could arrive, and Walker had raised a considerable force to march to him when he learned of his surrender. Allen had placed guards between his position and the town, with orders to let nobody pass or repass. A good many prisoners were detained in this way early in the day, but one of them managed to escape and went to General Carleton in the city, who had made every preparation to take refuge in his ships, exposed the weakness of Allen's force, and it was decided to attack Allen in the middle of the afternoon, before assistance could reach him. Carleton marched out with about five hundred men, chiefly Canadians and residents of the city, and including only forty regulars. Allen's force was made up of only 30 Americans and 80 Canadians, but he was in a well-selected position, and he defended it bravely and skillfully for an hour and three-quarters, until nearly all his Canadians had deserted him, when he finally surrendered with a force of thirty-one effective men and seven wounded, on being assured good quarters for himself and men.

Schuyler and Montgomery both commented severely in letters and reports on Allen's rashness in making the attack single-handed, and this view was excusable with the information they had at the time. They knew nothing apparently of the plan of concert with Brown, or how surely it would have succeeded if Allen had had the co-operation he had a right to depend on. They only knew the consequences of defeat, which were so disastrous, putting "the French people into great consternation," as Warner wrote, and "changing the face of things," as a Tory wrote to Governor Franklin of New Jersey (the son of the great Benjamin Franklin). "The Canadians," he added, "were before nine-tenths for the Bostonians; they are now returned to their duty." The truth is that the attack instead of being a reckless exhibition of Allen's vanity was planned after a full consultation, on the united judgment of all the officers in both commands, and it only failed by one of those military accidents which can never be provided against, in Brown's failure to co-operate. Carleton practically admits this in his report when he shows how poorly prepared Montreal was for attack, and how he was on the point of abandoning the city when he learned from the escaped prisoner of Allen's weakness.

Allen's captivity was full of exciting and characteristic incidents. He had just handed over his sword when an Indian attempted to shoot him. Allen instantly twitched the officer to whom he had handed his sword between him and the savage. Then another attacked him, and Allen only saved himself from being murdered by twitching the officer around him with such swiftness that neither of the Indians could reach him without endangering the officer, until another officer and an Irishman drove the Indians away. Allen then walked with the officers to Montreal, meeting in the barrack yard General Prescott, who, when he learned that it was the Colonel Allen of Ticonderoga fame, broke into a torrent of abuse, shook his cane over Allen's head, until the latter shook his fist and assured the general that it would be "the beetle of mortality" for him if he struck. Then Prescott, according to Allen's narrative, ordered forward a sergeant's command to kill the thirteen Canadians who were included in the surrender. Allen stepped between the executioner and the prisoners, and told Prescott to thrust the bayonets into his breast, for he was the sole cause of the Canadians taking up arms. Prescott, after a little hesitation, replied with an oath: "I will not execute you now, but you shall grace a halter at Tyburn."

Then began Allen's two years and seven months of captivity. He was first put on board the ship of war Gaspé in the harbor and kept in irons six weeks. The leg irons he describes as weighing thirty or forty pounds with a bar eight feet long, and so heavy that he could only lie on his back. He wrote to Prescott and Carleton protesting against such usage and contrasting it with that he had accorded to the prisoners he took at Ticonderoga, but without eliciting a reply, though he was finally transferred to another ship where he was very generously treated. But this polite treatment lasted less than a fortnight, when, on the appearance of Arnold before Quebec, Allen and the other prisoners were placed on board a merchantman, the Adamant, and shipped to England. Their treatment aboard this ship was most villainous. Thirty-four of them were confined, handcuffed, in a little room 20x22, so dark that they could not see one another, filled with vermin and an intolerable stench, without an adequate supply of water, where, suffering from diarrhea and fever, they were compelled to eat, sleep, and perform all the offices of life. Allen protested against it as a disgrace to honor and humanity, but was told that it was good enough for a rebel. In the course of the dispute a lieutenant among the Tories spit in his face. Allen, handcuffed as he was, sprang upon him, knocked him partly down, pursued him in fury to the cabin, where the lieutenant, thoroughly frightened, put himself under the protection of a file of men with fixed bayonets.

Upon their arrival at Falmouth, England, Allen and his men were confined in Pendennis Castle, near that city. The government was evidently puzzled just what to do with him. Bets were made in London that he would be hanged; but the Tory ministry hesitated to take this step, through fear of the great Whig leaders, who favored a more conciliatory policy toward the colonies. In the story of his captivity which he afterward published, he relates that an attempt was made to bribe him into joining the royalist cause. An "officer of high rank," whose name does not appear, was sent to him to represent that the injuries he had suffered from New York arose from an abuse of an order in council, and if he would return to allegiance to the king he should have a full pardon, his lands be restored to him, he and his men sent back to Boston, and he placed in command of a company of rangers; but if he refused they must all be disposed of as the law directs—a delicate way of intimating that he would grace a gallows. Allen only makes a brief allusion to this incident. But the event shows that he spurned the bribe and dared the government to do its worst. His bold demeanor won the sympathy of liberal-minded people. He learned afterwards, he says, that there was a move for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain for him his liberty.

At length, at a cabinet meeting on Dec. 27, it was decided that he and his associates should be sent back to America and detained there as prisoners of war. Early in January, 1776, they were accordingly placed on board a man-of-war, and Allen put in irons. They were taken first to Cork Harbor, Ireland, then to the North Carolina coast, and later to Halifax, where they were kept for several months, being transferred from one ship to another and treated with various degrees of inhumanity as the temper of the different commanding officers dictated. Finally, in November, 1776, they were landed in New York, then in British control, where Allen was placed on parole, and remained for eighteen months in comparative comfort, though he tells a harrowing story of the way in which the private soldiers were treated. He exerted himself a good deal to alleviate their condition, but with little success. Of the thirty-one men captured with him two died in imprisonment, three were exchanged, and all the rest made their escape at one time or another. It was while at New York that the second attempt was made to seduce his allegiance, by an officer who came to his lodgings, told him that his fidelity, though in a wrong cause, had recommended him to General Howe, who wished to make him colonel of a regiment of Tories; proposed to send him back to England to be introduced to Lord George Germaine, and probably to the king, and return with Burgoyne; he should be paid richly in gold, and receive for his services in reducing the country a large tract of land in Connecticut or Vermont, as he preferred. According to his own story he refused the offer with characteristic emphasis, likening it to the temptation of "our Saviour" in the wilderness.

Allen was exchanged May 3, 1778, for Col. Alexander Campbell, and after two days of courteous entertainment at General Campbell's headquarters crossed New Jersey to Valley Forge, where he was entertained by Washington for several days and received marked honors from Putnam, Gates, Lafayette, Steuben and all the officers and men who were heroically maintaining the country's cause in its very darkest hour. He wrote a letter to Congress offering his services to the cause in any capacity where he could be useful, and then proceeded to Bennington, going most of the way in company with Gates, everywhere being received with acclamations by the people, and reaching home Sunday evening, May 31, where the expressions of love and enthusiasm could not be restrained, even in that orthodox populace, and cannon boomed welcome from the people, who had long supposed him dead. Fourteen guns were fired, one for each state and one for Vermont. His brother Heman had just died at Salisbury, Conn., while he was on his journey home. His only son had died during his captivity. His wife, in feeble health, and four daughters were in Sunderland.

He at once asserted his old powers of leadership. David Redding had been convicted of treason and sentenced to be hanged. A rehearing had been petitioned for on the ground that his conviction was a violation of the common law, being by a jury of six instead of twelve. Governor Chittenden had granted a reprieve to June 11. The populace, very bitter against Redding, was disappointed, angry, and threatening to take the law into its own hands, when Allen appeared and cried: "Attention, the whole!" and he proceeded to explain the illegality of the trial, and told the people to go home and return in a week, and they should "see a man hung; if not Redding, I will be." The crowd obeyed. Allen was appointed attorney for the state at the next trial, and he secured Redding's conviction.

He was selected to write a reply to a proclamation of clemency issued by Governor Clinton the February previous, in which the New York governor charged Vermont's wrongs to the British government while New York was a colony, and offered to recall the outlawry act, to revoke all unjust preference in grants, reduce the quit rents to the New Hampshire basis, make the fees of patents reasonable, and confirm all grants made by New Hampshire. Allen's reply, in a pamphlet, was skillful, and made clear the impracticability of what seemed and doubtless was intended to be a fair proposition. He showed that as a matter of fact most of the New Hampshire and Massachusetts grants had been covered by New York patents and that as a matter of law it was impossible for New York to cancel her former grants, and cited the opinion of the lords of trade to that effect. Many people had been eager to accede to Governor Clinton's terms, but Allen's argument was so strong, the rights of self-government so well stated, that the tide of public opinion was completely turned. Probably it prevented a dissolution of the state government. Here again, as well as in the initial stages of the controversy, was it true, as his best biographer, Henry Hall, says: "But for him the state of Vermont would probably never have existed."

He was three times sent on embassies to Congress, first in August, 1778, with reference to the trouble with New Hampshire over the "Eastern union." He performed the delicate duties with great tact and reported, strongly advising the dissolution of that union and saying that unless it was done "the nation will annihilate Vermont." He was again sent in 1779 with Jonas Fay, to defend the new state's action, and to show Congress, as they wrote July 1, 1779, that they were "willing that every part of the conduct of the people we represent should at any convenient time be fully laid before the Grand Council of America," but, considering all the embarrassments of the country, "would be far from urging a decision * * until you can have leisure to take it up deliberately." The third mission was with Fay, Stephen R. Bradley, Moses Robinson and Paul Spooner in 1780 to defend Vermont's case against the claims of all three of the adjoining states, and the duties were performed with skill and address.

He was also, Oct. 19, 1799, appointed agent to wait on the Council and General Court of Massachusetts to negotiate for an abandonment of the pretensions which the latter state had raised to jurisdiction over Vermont, and to secure her acknowledgment of Vermont's independence. He was, in October, 1779, though not a member of the Assembly, appointed chairman of a committee, consisting of himself, Reuben Jones, Nathan Clark, and John Fassett, "to form the outlines of a plan to be pursued for defense before Congress against the neighboring states in consequence of a late act of that body." He was repeatedly appointed on legislative committees when not a member. He was elected to the Legislature from Arlington, though his "usual home" was in Bennington and his family lived in Sunderland, and he was allowed to act, though he refused to take the oath expressing belief in the divine inspiration of the Bible and profession of the Protestant religion.

His military service after his release from captivity was confined entirely to his own state. Congress gave him the commission of brevet brigadier-general, but did not call him into the field. Perhaps the reason was the suspicion of his loyalty that soon became rife. The third effort to seduce him was publicly known before he knew it. The Legislature made him major-general and commander-in-chief of the Vermont militia, and he held the position for two years, but no active service was required except to guard the frontiers. In February, 1780, Col. Beverly Robinson, a Virginia Tory, wrote him a letter alluding to the Vermont feeling over its treatment by Congress and inviting a negotiation with the British. The letter was delivered to him on the streets of Arlington in July. Allen showed it to Governor Chittenden and the leading men of the state, and it was decided to pay no attention to it. The next March, however, while the Haldimand negotiation was in full progress, Allen sent the letter, with a duplicate which Robinson had impatiently forwarded, to Congress, with a long screed of his own, well calculated to impress Congress with the idea that it was running a great risk of driving Vermont to the other side by its unjust treatment. He said he was confident Congress would not dispute his sincere attachment to the cause of his country, though he did not hesitate to declare that he was fully "grounded in the opinion that Vermont had an indubitable right to agree on terms of cessation of hostilities with Great Britain, provided the United States persisted in rejecting her application for a union with them; for Vermont of all people would be the most miserable were she obliged to defend the independence of the United States, and they at the same time claiming full liberty to overturn and ruin the independence of Vermont." He closed with the characteristic words: "I am as resolutely determined to defend the independence of Vermont as Congress is that of the United States, and rather than fail, will retire with my hardy Green Mountain Boys into the desolate caverns of the mountains and wage war with human nature at large."

The Haldimand negotiations are more fully discussed in the sketch of Ira Allen, whose consummate shrewdness conducted them to success. Ethan Allen was in the secret of them all, and at the time had to bear more of the suspicion and odium than any other man, but his part was chiefly that of counsellor, with very little of the active work. There is reason for believing that he told Washington all about them in the beginning, and that the policy of protecting Vermont by fooling the British had the tacit approval of the country's chieftain. There is no chance for reasonable belief that Allen ever for a moment contemplated treason to the American cause; he had twice spurned offers when far more alluring. He was constantly and carefully looking after the arms and equipments of the state, to keep her in the best condition for defense. In December, 1780, even while the charges of treason were getting loudest against him, he was negotiating with Governor Trumbull of Connecticut for two tons of powder, to resist an invasion from Canada. He offered, April 14, 1781, when there seemed to be a chance that the British could no longer be kept off by diplomacy, in a letter to Governor Clinton, his own services and those of two other Vermont officers to defend New York against invaders.

The only question is whether in his deceit of the British he went beyond the lines of honor. The worst piece of evidence is a letter written to Haldimand, June 16, 1782, and closing with these words: "I shall do everything in my power to render this a British province." The letter was unsigned, but has generally been believed to have been written by him. Allen, as commander of the Vermont army in 1781, concluded a truce with the British forces while the negotiations were in progress, and he got the northern parts and frontier of New York included in it. He reported these doings to Colonel Webster and General Schuyler, and warned the latter of a project to capture his person, assuring him that the "surmises of my corresponding with the enemy to the prejudice of the United States are wholly without foundation." Captain Sherwood, who came to Allen's headquarters at Castleton as an envoy from Haldimand, reported Allen as bargaining hypothetically for himself and for the state, but the report of his terms concludes with this significant condition: "If, however, Congress should grant Vermont a seat in that assembly as a separate state, then these negotiations to be at an end and be kept secret on both sides."

But the wildest reports of his treachery flew about the country. Some of them even represented him at the head of British troops in Canada. The feeling grew at home and finally focused in an arraignment before the Legislature in November, 1782, for misconduct in the armistice. This is what appears in the "Governor and Council" minutes as the "Captain Hotchkiss Resolutions." The record is very meagre. Fay and Bradley, who were on his staff at Castleton, testified, and apparently convinced all that nothing improper had been done. Allen resigned his commission, evidently deeply hurt that after all he had done for the people he should be subject to such suspicion, that, as he said, "such false and ignominious aspersions" were entertained against him for a moment, and he indignantly left the house, declaring that he would "hear no more of it." The Legislature appointed a committee of two to express the state's thanks for Allen's services, and then accepted the resignation which Allen had offered "because there was uneasiness among some of the people on account of his command;" but he patriotically said he would ever be ready "to serve the state according to his abilities," if ever necessary.

The next spring he was chosen general of the brigade of militia, but refused to accept, though with a repetition of his promise to serve the state in an unofficial capacity in case of need. In December, 1781, when New York attempted force to get control of the state, Allen was present with the force of Vermont militia that defeated the project, not nominally in command, but evidently at the request of Governor Chittenden, as his account against the state for that service was allowed.

The rest of his days were passed in private life, but with recognition on every side as the leader of the state. In 1782 he was called to the field, as he had been two years previously, to quiet the rebellious "Yorkers" in Windham county, and when his party was fired on by ambushed men in Guilford he walked into the town on foot and gave his famous warning that unless the inhabitants of the town peacefully submitted to the authority of the state of Vermont he would "lay it as desolate as Sodom and Gomorrah." When Shay's rebellion was started in Massachusetts, messengers were sent to him offering him the chief command, but he contemptuously refused it, ordered the messengers out of the state, notified the Massachusetts authorities, and also exerted himself vigorously to prevent the insurgents from making Vermont a place of refuge. Though so long posted as an outlaw, though a leader of revolutionists and a discourses on human rights through all his active career, and though seemingly so recklessly extravagant in his talk, he was always the friend of law and order.

In 1787 he moved to Burlington, where he devoted himself to farming. He died, Feb. 12, 1789, at the age of only fifty-one, soon after returning from South Hero, where he had been for a load of hay, and had spent the afternoon and evening previous, at the invitation of Col. Ebenezer Allen, with a party of old friends. On the journey his negro attendant spoke to him several times and received no reply, and on reaching home he was found to be unconscious with apoplexy. He died a few hours later. He was buried with military honors, and his remains rest in Green Mount Cemetery in Burlington, overlooking the beautiful valley of the Winooski. The Legislature in 1855 ordered a monument to be erected over his grave, a Tuscan column of granite 42 feet high, and 4 1-2 feet in diameter. A commanding statue of him designed by Mead, of Vermont marble, stands in the portico of the capitol at Montpelier. Another by the same great sculptor, of Italian marble, is in the capitol at Washington. The earliest statue of him was modeled by B. H. Kinney, a native of Sunderland, back in the early fifties. It was pronounced by aged people who had seen him an excellent likeness, but it is still private property. A fourth statue of heroic size, designed by Peter Stevenson, was unveiled at Burlington, July 4, 1873, and surmounts the Allen monument.

Much that Allen wrote has been preserved to the present day. Among his works, besides those mentioned on previous pages, was his "Vindication of Vermont and Her Right to Form an Independent State," a forceful argument of 172 pages, written in 1779 and published under authority of the Governor and Council. In 1779 also appeared his "Narrative of My Captivity," from which his biographers have got much of their material. In 1778 appeared his "Animadversary Address" in answer to Governor Clinton; in 1780, "Concise Refutation of the Claims of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and New York to the Territory of Vermont," which he and Jonas Fay had prepared with much care; and in 1782 a "Defense of the Eastern and Western Unions." In 1774 his most ambitious pamphlet on the New York controversy appeared, a document of over 200 pages and an exhaustive discussion of the historical aspect of the case, showing that prior to the royal order of 1764 New York had no claim to extend easterly to the Connecticut river. In 1784 he brought out the work on which he expected his fame to rest, his "Oracles of Reason," printed at Bennington, which he called a "compendious system of natural religion," and consisting as he described it of "the untutored logic and sallies of a mind nursed principally in the mountain wilds of America." It was a volume of 477 pages, an infidel work, denying the inspiration of the scriptures, but energetic in its expressions of veneration for the being and perfection of the Deity and its firm belief in the immortality of the soul. It was laid a good deal on the same lines as Paine's "Age of Reason," without Paine's caustic style of debate, but with a larger and healthier view of things eternal. There was a presumptuous tone to it that greatly marred it, and yet much of high ideals, of humanitarian sentiment, and of insight beyond things material into things spiritual.

ALLEN, IRA. Born Cornwall, Conn., April 21, 1751; sixth and youngest son of Joseph and Mary (Baker) Allen; died

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 15, 1814. Married Jerusha, daughter of Gen. Roger Enos. He received a good English education, and became a practical surveyor while still very young. He came to Vermont before he was twenty. He entered with zeal into various land speculations, and was a member of the "Onion River Land Company," which consisted, besides himself, of his brothers, Ethan, Heman, and Zirmi, with Remember Baker, and which became the most extensive proprietor of land in the state.

He served as a member of the "Green Mountain Boys," was a lieutenant in Warner's regiment in the Canada campaign in the fall of 1775, and was selected by Montgomery as one of the two officers for the confidential trust of attacking Cape Diamond and throwing rockets as a signal for three other detachments to attack Quebec on the night of Montgomery's attempt on the city. He was appointed secretary of the committee of safety as soon as it was formed and served until its labors closed. He it was, who after the retaking of Ticonderoga by the British, when the settlements seemed helpless before the on-coming army of Burgoyne, conceived the scheme of confiscating the estates of the Tories to raise money to equip and support troops, and as a result within a week a regiment of men was in the field. He sent expresses at his own expense in every direction with news of the disaster, and appeals for prompt forwarding of troops. In the terror of the time no one else, even among the military commanders, attended to this, and it may not be too much to say that the victory at Bennington was due to the energy and the wise provision of Ira Allen. He organized scouting parties that gathered full information of the enemy's movements and forwarded it by express in all directions, with such encouragements as it warranted that the enemy could be met and repulsed. He sent timely warnings of the expedition to Bennington, so that it was by no accident that Stark and the New Hampshire troops and the Berkshire militia arrived in season to repulse and crush it. He helped to concert the measures for the recapture of Ticonderoga, Crown Point and the strong posts in his rear that helped so much towards the ruin of Burgoyne. He did all this when the new state was without funds or credit, as well as without organization, when near three-fourths of the people of the west side of the mountain had fled from their homes, and a large part of those of the east side were disposed to favor New York's claims, when weak nerved and weak principled men were flocking to Burgoyne and taking the oath of allegiance to the Crown, and when, besides the danger of invasion from the British and the savages, the late proceedings of Congress had shown partiality towards New York, and the embryonic state had every reason to expect hostile action. He staked not only large amounts of his money, but his life, on the chance of winning victory out of this seemingly desperate situation. His actual military service in the Revolution, ended with the retreat from Canada in 1776, but he soon became captain, then colonel and finally major-general of the state militia. He was also a member of the board of war during nearly the whole of the Revolution. He was nearly always the agent of the state, either alone or with others, in dealing with Congress and with New Hampshire and New York.

On the organization of the new state government, in 1778, he was chosen a member of the council, and was its secretary. He was also elected state treasurer at the beginning and held that office for nine years, and was surveyor-general about the same time, until the jealousies and antagonisms that accumulated against him, the complaints that he was holding "so many offices," resulted in his defeat in 1786, with widely-believed charges of corruption soon following, and though they were afterwards cleared away and it was shown that he had been constantly aiding the state with his money instead of making money out of it, enough of the cloud clung to the old suspicion about the Haldimand negotiation to somewhat shadow his subsequent career. In the elections of 1784 and 1785 he failed as candidate for state treasurer before the people, and was only elected by the joint assembly. He was dropped from the governor's council after a year of service in 1785, and the Assembly on the last day of the session of the latter year, aimed a bill at him to annul his surveys and discontinue his work as surveyor general, which the council succeeded in postponing to the next session. He became in 1791 the first treasurer of the town of Colchester, and represented that town eight times in the General Assembly.

The Haldimand negotiations must form a chief feature of Allen's biography. The fact was that, beginning with a cartel for the exchange of prisoners which was concluded with the Vermont authorities when it was refused to Washington, these negotiations brought about a truce between Vermont and the British forces, which was extended through the last three campaigns of the war, while emissaries and spies passed back and forth in great profusion, and the hope was kept dangling before the British that the state would desert the cause of the Revolution and return to allegiance to the Crown. Several times the negotiations went so far as to discuss the terms of settlement and to fix dates for it; but Ira Allen as the principal negotiator was sure to turn up with some plausible reason for postponing decisive action. It is notable that in all the correspondence and negotiations, including the conversations as reported by the English representatives, there was never once a single profession of loyalty to the king on the part of the Vermont leaders. The participants on the Vermont side took particular pains to protect themselves in history. Early in the negotiations they put on paper a record of their purpose in the form of a certificate for Allen prepared in June, 1781, and signed by all the eight men in the secret, Jonas and Joseph Fay, Samuel Safford, Samuel and Moses Robinson, Governor Chittenden, Timothy Brownson, and John Fassett. This certificate stated explicitly that the scheme was adopted "to make them (the British authorities) believe Vermont had a desire to negotiate a treaty of peace," and because it was beyond the power of the state to defend itself by arms, and that "we think it to be a necessary political manoeuvre to save the frontier of this state." Whether in the ethics of war such deception as was practiced on the British was justifiable, is another question. But at least it can be said that it was a necessity, the only thing the Vermonters could do. The only alternatives were to absolutely desert to the British side, suffer ruinous invasion, or commit political suicide by surrendering to New York, and then without any certainty of protection against the British. And it was the most useful thing for the American cause that could possibly have been done; for it kept an army of ten thousand men idle on the border in Canada. It really made possible the Yorktown movement, which would have been well-nigh impracticable with such an army besides Clinton's left in Washington's rear. Washington knew of the negotiations at least a month before the surrender of Cornwallis and he understood its purpose.

Allen played with consummate address during these negotiations not only a double, but a triple, and even a quadruple game. While he was fanning the British hopes to their highest, he was an agent before Congress to urge the admission of the state and resist the claims to jurisdiction of New York and New Hampshire; was negotiating with the Legislature and authorities of New Hampshire and the commander of the New York troops to avert bloodshed pending a decision by Congress over the conflicting claims in regard to the East and West Unions; and in the meanwhile converted to the support of the new state Luke Knowlton, who had been sent to Philadelphia by the adherents of New York in Cumberland County, which then comprised practically the territory of the present Windsor and Windham Counties. The nerve, the resourcefulness, and the comprehension of human motives by which he kept all these schemes afloat, and the people of his own state passably well satisfied at the same time, were little short of marvelous. They had a good illustration in the hearing before the Vermont Legislature in June, 1781, on a resolution for an inquiry into the rumor of a secret treaty with Canada. Allen knew that there were several spies from Canada among the spectators. How could he answer the inquiry so as to satisfy the suspicious Vermont patriots without undeceiving the British authorities as soon as his words were reported to them? But he did it with a frankness that was praised by both sides. Governor Chittenden led off, stating how he had, at the request of several persons who had friends prisoners in Canada, appointed Colonel Allen to meet a British commissioner to arrange for an exchange, and how the latter had succeeded after considerable difficulty in accomplishing it, though no such exchanges had taken place with the United States or any individual state in the northern department. For further particulars he would refer them to Colonel Allen.

The latter told how, having made his report to the governor and council, not expecting to be called on, he had left his commission and papers at home; but he was ready to make a verbal statement, or if desired he would go home and produce the writings for the inspection of the Legislature. They called for the papers and the next day he appeared with them, read them seemingly without skip or hesitation, made a short verbal explanation which seemed to show that the British had exhibited great generosity in the business, and narrated sundry occurrences that indicated that there was a fervent wish for peace among the British officers, and that the English government was as tired of the war as the United States; and he concluded by inviting any member of the Legislature or any auditor in the gallery who wished to ask any further questions to do so and he was ready to answer them. But "all seemed," to use his words, "satisfied that nothing had been done inconsistent to the interests of the states," and many of those who had before been most suspicious complimented him for his "open and candid conduct." That evening he had a conference with the spies from Canada, and they also had nothing but praise for the devotion he had shown to the cause of union with Britain!

Meanwhile, in 1779, Allen visited the Legislatures of New Jersey, Delaware, Pennsylvania, and Maryland to enlist their support in favor of Vermont's claims to recognition as a separate state apart from any pretensions to jurisdiction which might be asserted by New York, New Hampshire, or Massachusetts. In 1780, with Stephen R. Bradley, and in the following year, in connection with a number of others, he appeared as an agent before the Continental Congress in furtherance of the same end; and it was largely through his unfailing tact, his adroitness, and his skill in clever political manipulation that the question of Vermont's partition between the adjoining states was postponed until the close of the war and that Vermont remains to-day a sovereign commonwealth. His official services to the state closed in 1790, when he was member of the commission on the part of Vermont that finally settled the protracted controversy with New York and cleared the way for the admission of the state into the Union.

He was the father of the University of Vermont. On Oct. 14, 1789, he presented a memorial to the Legislature for the establishment of the college with subscriptions amounting to £5643, of which he contributed £4000, and the charter was granted Nov. 3, 1791. The financial ruin which afterward overtook him caused the abandonment of his schemes for the advancement of the institution; but the services which he rendered it can scarcely be overestimated, and annually "Founder's Day" is celebrated by the university in his honor. He became interested also in projects for a commercial treaty with Canada, and for canals connecting Lake Champlain with both the St. Lawrence and the Hudson.

In 1795 Allen went to Europe for his canal enterprise and on a commission from Governor Chittenden to purchase arms for the state. He got nothing but fair words from the British cabinet in return for his exertions for the canal, but he secured twenty-four cannon and twenty thousand muskets in France, and with them took ship for home. But the ship was captured by an English cruiser, and seized with the whole cargo on a charge that it was designed to aid the rebellion in Ireland. Allen showed conclusively by evidence secured from Vermont that the charge was untrue and the arms purchased for the purpose he represented. But it took eight years of litigation to do it, and the enormous expense of it, with the neglect of his affairs at home, ruined him. He at one time estimated his real estate in Vermont to be worth on proper appraisal from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000. He may have included in this estimate the shares of his four brothers and of Remember Baker, of whose estate he was administrator, but there is no doubt that he was enormously wealthy, or that while he was in Europe he was robbed right and left with claims of fraudulent title, executions, and tax sales. He had accumulated considerable unpopularity at home, having had a long controversy over his accounts as state treasurer as well as surveyor-general, and had once gone so far, in 1792, as to begin a suit against the state in the United States circuit court, and these things were of material assistance to the people who were plundering him. Finally, wearied with lawsuits, broken in health and fortune, and even jailed at Burlington by exacting creditors, he made his escape and fled from the state for which he had done so much. He lived in Philadelphia the last few years of his life, where he died in poverty, and was buried in a stranger's grave in the Free Quaker Burial Ground, with no stone to mark the spot.

It is only in comparatively recent years that his immense services to Vermont, far outweighing the more theatric services of his brother Ethan, have come to be rightly estimated. In tardy acknowledgment of the state's debt to him, it was proposed early in the present century to disinter his remains at Philadelphia and bury them honorably in Vermont soil; but a thorough search failed to disclose the location of his grave, and his ashes lie unidentified far from the state which was so late in giving him his just credit.

BAKER, REMEMBER. Born Woodbury, Conn., and baptized June 9, 1737; son of Remember and Desire (Warner) Baker; killed during the American invasion of Canada in the fall of 1775. A cousin of the Allens, and, by marriage, of Seth Warner; one of the men for whose head New York offered a reward; was among the most influential and useful of the early leaders and was fast growing towards a larger fame when his life was cut off at the age of thirty-eight. In early youth he lost his father, who was shot by a neighbor while out hunting, and he was apprenticed to a joiner, where he learned to read and write and acquired the habits of prudence, energy and self-reliance that served him so well in after years. At the age of eighteen he served in the expedition against Canada in the French war and saw much service about Lakes George and Champlain, and in this way acquired much knowledge of Vermont lands and their attractiveness. He was present at Ticonderoga when Abercrombie fell. He rose to be an officer before the war closed, and gained much distinction by his bravery and discretion. He came to Vermont with the first wave of immigration to the west side, in 1763, at the age of twenty-six, and spent much time exploring lands and hunting, and a year later he settled in Arlington, where he built the first grist mill on the grants north of Bennington, which attracted many settlers to that vicinity, and identified himself unreservedly with the cause of the settlers when the trouble with New York arose. He is described as cool and temperate in council, but resolute and determined in action. He usually wished to inflict severer penalties on the Yorkers than his companions. Perhaps his own tough experience afforded some reason, for, stimulated by the reward offered, an attempt was made in March, 1772, to capture him, by a dozen partisans of New York under the lead of one John Monroe. They broke into his house in the dawn of a Monday morning, pounded and maltreated his children, attempted to slash his wife with a sword, and even to fire the building after plundering it. Baker at first attempted to defend himself in his chamber, but to draw the attention of his assailants from his family burst a board from the end of the house, escaped and ran. Then, according to the story written by Ethan Allen for the Hartford Courant, they set a large dog upon him, overtook him, pinioned him, refused to allow him to dress—for he was just as he arose from the bed—threw him into a carriage where they clubbed and cut and slashed him unmercifully until blood streamed from various parts of the body, and then drove rapidly towards Albany. Three men who pursued were fired upon by Monroe's party, and robbed of all their effects to the amount of $40. But another rescuing party was formed at Arlington as soon as the news of the kidnapping spread, and pursued with such vigor that it came up with Monroe's gang at Hudson's Ferry, just opposite Albany, drove the captors off, and took Baker back in triumph to Arlington. Baker was with Allen as a captain at Ticonderoga, and also with the regiment of Green Mountain Boys when the invasion of Canada was begun in the fall following. When Schuyler took command of the northern department he sent Baker ahead to reconnoiter the enemy's position and obtain information of the military situation in Canada, and it was while out on this duty that he was shot by the Indians in the vicinity of St. Johns. He was not only a brave and capable officer and a progressive business man, but he was a kind neighbor and he relieved the distress of many a family. He left five children, one of whom, also named Remember, became a lawyer of some note in New York state.

HERRICK, COL. SAMUEL. One of the romantic figures of the Revolution and the few years before, and that is all we know of him. He came to Bennington about 1768, and soon after the Revolution moved to Springfield, N. Y., but prior to and after that time his career is a blank to written history. He was a captain in the Ticonderoga expedition, and was detailed by Allen with a party of thirty men to capture Skeenesboro (now Whitehall) and take into custody Major Skeene and his party. He succeeded completely, secured the young man and a schooner and several bateaux with which they hastened to Ticonderoga. In the summer of 1777 he was made colonel of a regiment of rangers which the council of safety ordered raised to help meet Burgoyne's invasion. He and his rangers annoyed Burgoyne, obstructed his advance by felling trees over the roads and rolling stones in his path, so that Burgoyne was compelled to cross Fort Ann Mountain with his heavy train of artillery by a road that was almost impassable. They harassed his rear, cut off his supplies, and in a thousand ways did the work of genuine "rangers" to increase the difficulties of the British descent. It was a work which contributed materially to the final ruin of the invasion, and for it the credit is due the council of safety which ordered him to keep it up, while Schuyler was continually ordering him to abandon it and join the defensive army in the front of Burgoyne. He was at the battle of Bennington with such of this regiment as had then been enlisted and a body of local militia as a separate detachment, making a body of 300 men with which he led the attack on the rear of Baum's right simultaneously with the assaults of Colonels Nichols, Hubbard and Stickney on other parts of the line, and he did his part of that glorious day's work skillfully and gallantly. In September of the same year he and the Rangers with Colonel Brown's regiment gained the command of Lake George, drove the British from Mounts Independence, Defiance, and Hope, and forced their evacuation of Ticonderoga. He was afterwards in command of the southwestern regiment of the state militia and did active service on several occasions. The council in February, 1778, ordered a battalion of six companies to be raised under command of Herrick to aid a proposed attack of Lafayette on St. Johns, but the enterprise was given up. Herrick received a special letter of thanks from Gates and one from the Vermont council for his part in the Lake George expedition.

WARNER, SETH. Born Roxbury, Conn., May 17, 1743; son of Dr. Ebenezer Warner; died in his native town Dec. 26, 1784. The ablest soldier of Vermont's formative period. He early joined in the movement to the New Hampshire Grants, which were beginning to be settled since the close of the French and Indian war. He came to Bennington in 1765. He had only a common school education, but possessed some knowledge of botany, and was an ardent huntsman; and, judging from his circumstances, it has been suggested that he gave perhaps more attention to the chase and to his botanical studies than to the more prosaic duties of the farm. He was once or twice a member of conventions of the settlers, but had little ambition to play a part in the politics of the time. He took his share, however, in resisting the aggressions of the New York authorities. Though his farm was situated outside the village of Bennington and less than a mile from the New York border, and despite the fact that large rewards were offered for his arrest, the Yorkers never succeeded in capturing him. Once a New York officer, armed to the teeth, found and attempted to arrest him. Warner wounded and disarmed the man, but with the spirit of a soldier spared his life.

Warner was, in 1771, elected by a convention a captain of one of the companies in the regiment of Green Mountain Boys organized to resist New York. Four years later, in May, 1775, he joined Ethan Allen in the expedition against Ticonderoga; but, owing to the neglect to provide enough boats to transport the whole party to the New York side, he was left with the bulk of the expedition on the east shore of the lake, and so was not present at the actual capture of the fortress. The next day, however, he was sent with a detachment of men to take Crown Point, which he accomplished successfully, the fortress surrendering at the first summons. He earnestly seconded Allen's efforts for an invasion of Canada, going with him to Philadelphia and Albany to urge it on the Continental and Provincial Congresses. It looked for a time as if the controversy between New York and the people on the Grants was to disappear in the enthusiasm over the capture of Ticonderoga, for not only were Allen and Warner cordially received when they appeared before the Provincial Congress, but they were both willing and eager to lead troops raised under New York authority; and the Congress passed a resolution authorizing the raising of a regiment among the Vermonters to be commanded by officers chosen by themselves.

Allen, colonel of the Green Mountain Boys, and now in the first flush of his fame as the hero of Ticonderoga, expected to be chosen as a matter of course to lead the new regiment; and he was much chagrined, accordingly, when, in July, 1775, the convention from the towns to name the officers elected Warner to the command by a vote of 41 to 5. The New York government, however, failed to send Warner his commission, and it was left to General Montgomery, after the regiment's arrival in Canada, to order him to act as colonel and that he be obeyed as such. Moreover, New York, repenting of her short-lived magnanimity toward the settlers in the Grants, renewed her denunciations of Warner, and endeavored to persuade the Continental authorities to disband the regiment; yet it was but little more than a year after this that New York was relying mainly on Warner and this regiment for the protection of her own frontiers—an arduous and exhausting service which they cheerfully rendered.

When the invasion of Canada was finally begun in the fall of 1775, Warner joined it within three days. Montgomery, besieging St. John's, which was defended by some 700 troops under the command of Colonel McLean, promptly sent him with a part of his men to the St. Lawrence and vicinity of Montreal to watch the motions of the enemy. With 300 men he repulsed General Carleton when the latter attempted with 800 men to join McLean and raise the siege. Warner watched the British as they embarked from Montreal, permitted them to approach very near the south shore of the river, and then poured a hot fire into them, throwing them into disorder and compelling a retreat. It was well and gallantly done. After this success, he erected a battery at the mouth of the Sorel to command the passage of the St. Lawrence and block up Carleton in Montreal. Carleton managed to escape down the river to Quebec, and Montgomery took possession of Montreal November 13. But General Prescott, attempting to escape with a number of armed vessels loaded with provisions and military stores, was captured at the mouth of the Sorel with 120 men. Warner also commanded at an action at Longueuil, for which Montgomery commended his bravery and prudence.

November 20, as the regiment was too miserably clad to endure a winter's campaign, Montgomery discharged it with peculiar marks of respect. But the men had hardly reached home when General Wooster wrote Warner, telling of the desperate straits the invading army was in after the repulse at Quebec, and the sickness and desertions from which it was suffering, and urging him to raise a body of men and hasten to their support. "Let them come," General Wooster wrote, "by tens, twenties, thirties, forties or fifties, as fast as they can be prepared to march." Eleven days afterward Warner was again marching a regiment northward. The men had become habituated to turn out at his call, and they loved him as few officers are loved by their soldiers. He was affable and familiar with the humblest private without sacrificing any of the dignity necessary to command. The campaign was an extremely distressing one. The troops, even the freshly-armed Green Mountain Boys, lacked comfortable clothing, barracks, and provisions. Warner was placed in command of the rear guard, and did good service in covering the retreat, picking up the wounded and distressed and keeping generally only a few miles ahead of the British advance, who pursued closely from post to post. He brought off most of the invalids, and arrived at Ticonderoga a few days after the main column.

July 5, 1776, shortly after the final abandonment of Canada, Congress resolved, on a report of the board of war, to organize a regiment of regular troops for permanent service, to be under command of officers who had served in Canada. Warner was appointed colonel of this regiment which was raised chiefly in Vermont. Warner was at Ticonderoga with his regiment through the remainder of the campaign of 1776, and did some efficient service in protecting that post.

In the campaign of 1777, Warner went to work with his accustomed activity to meet the coming invasion of Burgoyne. He issued a stirring appeal to all Vermonters, and wrote, July 2, from Rutland to the convention at Windsor that an attack was expected at Ticonderoga, and urging that all men who could possibly be raised be forwarded at once. "I should be glad," he said, "if a few hills of corn unhoed should not be a motive sufficient to detain men at home." He reached Ticonderoga July 5, in season to assist in its defense; but morning had revealed the red coats of a British outpost in possession of the heights of Mount Defiance which commanded the fort, and General St. Clair and his council of war resolved to abandon the post that night, before Burgoyne's investment was completed.

Under cover of the darkness, as much of the military stores as possible was embarked in bateaux and sent for safety toward the head of the lake; and the garrison began its evacuation, in what was intended to be profound silence and secrecy, across the floating bridge which had been constructed to the eastern shore. Unfortunately, at the last moment one of the officers, anxious to leave behind as little as possible to fall into the enemy's hands, incautiously set fire to his quarters, and the flames, suddenly illuminating the night, not only disclosed to the British the movements of the Americans, but threw the garrison itself into a panic. The retreat became a headlong flight. Some semblance of order having been at last restored, the fugitive garrison advanced to Hubbardton, where a short rest was allowed, whereupon St. Clair with the main body of the troops proceeded toward Castleton, leaving Warner in command of the rear guard, consisting of his own regiment, together with a New Hampshire regiment under Colonel Hale, and another from Massachusetts under Colonel Francis, with orders to remain there till all stragglers should have come in.

Meanwhile, the retreat of the Americans having been discovered, General Frazier with his brigade set out in pursuit, followed after an interval by a considerable body of German troops under General Riedesel. Marching through the heat of the July day, Frazier arrived within a short distance of Warner's position, where he halted for the night. Advancing in the early morning of the 7th, he attacked the Americans about sunrise. Then was fought the battle of Hubbardton, the only real battle ever fought on Vermont soil. Colonel Hale, however, had withdrawn his regiment, which he afterward surrendered without a blow to a small force of the enemy whom he encountered. Thus Warner and Francis were left, with some 800 men, to meet the attack of the much larger force under Frazier. For a time the accurate and deadly fire of the Americans held the enemy at bay; but Francis, in command of the Massachusetts regiment, fell, shot through the breast, and his men began a disorderly flight, which Warner attempted in vain to arrest. The arrival of the German troops made further resistance impossible, and Warner and his men, the only remnant of the rear guard, succeeded in making their escape to the woods, and afterward found their way to Castleton. The result of this engagement subjected Warner to considerable criticism. Not only had St. Clair at Castleton, six miles away, failed to furnish any assistance, but he wrote to Schuyler that "the rear guard stopped rather imprudently six miles short of the main body." The fact remains, however, that Warner simply obeyed orders, and but for the desertion of the New Hampshire and Massachusetts men might have made a much more stubborn resistance, and even repulsed Frazier's attack.

Burgoyne, in the meantime, slowly continued his advance toward Saratoga. His progress was, however, much retarded by the fact that Warner, having somewhat recuperated his regiment, had joined forces with General Stark, at the head of a body of New Hampshire troops. Stark, no longer in the Continental service, had refused Schuyler's request to bring his men to join the Continental army. Instead, the combined Vermont and New Hampshire forces hung on the outlying flank of the invading army, and not only rendered Burgoyne's advance more cautious and dangerous, but made possible the brilliant American victory at Bennington. Burgoyne's provisions were running low, and it was decided to send a detachment to seize supplies which the Americans had stored at Bennington. This detachment consisted of eight hundred men under Colonel Baum, a veteran German officer, to be supported, if necessary, by an additional force under Lieutenant-Colonel Breymann. Warner himself had hurried on in advance of his regiment at the first tidings brought by his admirable scouting service of the approach of the British. He was with Stark two days before the battle, aided in planning the attack on Baum's intrenchments, and rode about the field with the general early in the fight. But so many of his regiment were off on scouting duty that, owing to a heavy rain, it was midnight on Aug. 15 before they arrived within a mile of Bennington. Their ammunition was wet, and a considerable part of the next day was exhausted before they could reach the scene of the battle. They arrived, however, most opportunely, just as Breymann had come with reinforcements for the British, after the day had once been won by the Americans, who were now scattered about in search of plunder. It was by Warner's earnest advice, and against Stark's first impression, that the fresh troops were at once thrown against Breymann, instead of an attempt being made to reform the whole army in a new line of attack. Warner put himself at the head of his regiment, pushed the fight with a fire and dash that made the Americans irresistible as soon as the other troops could be formed in line and brought into action, and swept Breymann and his battalion off the field in complete rout. The battle was planned and fought with a degree of military talent that would have done no discredit to any service in Europe, and Stark in his official report expressed his particular obligations to Warner, "whose superior skill was of great service." His brother, Jesse, was killed in the battle.

Warner was with Gates throughout the rest of the campaign, and after the surrender of Burgoyne he was in constant service along the Hudson and elsewhere. He commanded an expedition to Lake George Landing, by which the vessels in which Burgoyne might have escaped were captured. In April, 1778, he was ordered to Albany, leaving Vermont without protection. Schuyler sent him on a particular command into Yessop's Patent, which he executed with skill and address. It was not a field for brilliant achievements, but for vigilance, energy, and cool judgment in guarding against Indian incursions, watching the Tories, gathering information, and protecting communications. His bravery and military capacity came to be highly regarded by the officers of the Continental army. He was wounded from an ambush of Indians in September, 1780, when the only two officers with him fell dead by his side; and with his constitution undermined by his constant exertions and exposures, he returned to Bennington toward the close of the war a dying man, with poverty to crown his misfortunes. Never a business man or thoughtful for money matters, he had taken no interest or part in the land speculations that made most of the Vermont leaders wealthy. The proprietors of several towns had voted him land as a reward for his services, but most of it was sold for taxes, and he never received any benefit. The neglect of his affairs and other tax sales while he was fighting for his country had nearly used up what little possessions he had, so that before his death his wife was forced to appeal for charity to the helpless Congress. In 1777 the Legislature had granted him 2,000 acres in the northwest part of Essex county, supposing it would be valuable, but he never realized much from it.

Colonel Warner was not at any time in the secret of the Haldimand negotiations, but like most people believed that something wrong was going on between the British and the Vermont authorities, and was very indignant about it, becoming estranged from his old associates on account of it. He went with a Bennington committee to Arlington, in 1782, to protest to Governor Chittenden against the sending of prisoners that had been taken in war to Canada, threatening to raise a regiment to overtake and bring them back. There was an altercation, and a reply from the governor, substantially telling him to mind his own business, that Colonel Allen's regiment which had taken the prisoners was able to protect them, and that there would soon be seen a generous return of prisoners from Canada—which proved to be the fact.

Colonel Warner returned to Roxbury, Conn., in the summer of 1784, and died there at the age of forty-one. He was long sick; and his last few months were clouded by fits of insanity. The burial was with all the honors of war. In 1859 the state of Connecticut caused a neat and substantial monument, an obelisk of Quincy granite, about 21 feet high, to be erected over his grave.

But for over a century and a quarter no memorial of him existed in the state which he so splendidly served. On Bennington Battle Day, Aug. 16, 1911, however, a monument in his memory was unveiled at Bennington Center, on the grounds of the Bennington Monument Association—Vermont's first public recognition of her debt to her most brilliant soldier of the Revolution.

*Died Aug. 25, 1797.

†Lieutenant-governor, acting governor on the death of Governor Chittenden.

‡Lieutenant-governor, governor by reason of no election of governor by the people or the Legislature.

§Died in office, Feb. 7, 1870.

§Lieutenant-governor, governor by reason of the death of Governor Washburn.

CHITTENDEN, THOMAS. Governor 1778-89, 1790-97. Born East Guilford, Conn., Jan. 6, 1730; died Williston, Aug. 25, 1797; son of Ebenezer, and descended from a Welsh family, one of whose members, Moses, was an officer in Cromwell's own regiment. Worked on his father's farm till 18; then shipped on a voyage to the West Indies; was captured by a French cruiser, England and France being then at war; was landed, moneyless and friendless, on one of the islands, and experienced much suffering before finally reaching home. At age of twenty married Elizabeth Meigs; removed to Salisbury, Conn.; became man of influence there, was colonel of militia, and represented town six years in the colonial Assembly. Came to Vermont 1774; settled at Williston, when there was scarcely a house or road in that region; upon American retreat from Canada, 1776, took refuge in Massachusetts, but soon bought farm in Arlington; lived there, and for a short time at Pownal and at Danby, until after close of the Revolution; then returned to Williston. At Arlington worked with the Allens and Matthew Lyon to rid the town of the strong Tory element there, until nearly every royalist either submitted or was driven out of town; was first president of committee of safety at Bennington; member of convention at Dorset, Sept. 25, 1776, to consider the independence of the state; at Westminster convention was member of the committee which drafted the "Declaration of Independence of the New Hampshire Grants"; at Windsor convention was member of the committee which framed the state constitution; was chosen member and president of the council of safety, upon which devolved the management of the state's affairs, executive, legislative, and judicial, until a constitutional state government should be established. He possessed much of that poise of mind and character which distinguished Washington; that judicial temperament which reserves judgment until the evidence has been carefully weighed; keen insight into human nature; rare discretion and great sagacity in practical matters; these qualities, together with his previous legislative experience, his command of affairs, and the leadership to which he had rapidly risen among the settlers, made him the natural choice as first executive of the new state; he was elected governor of Vermont March 12, 1778; was thereafter annually reelected until his death, with the single exception of the year 1789, when, having become involved in the popular suspicion surrounding the conduct of Ira Allen as state treasurer and surveyor-general, and being accused of using his official position for the furtherance of Allen's land speculations, he failed to obtain a majority of the votes, and, there being no election by the people, Moses Robinson was chosen governor by the Legislature; but in 1790, a settlement of his accounts having shown that Allen had advanced a certain amount of money to the state and that the alleged fraudulent conveyance of land to him was merely in payment of such loan, Chittenden was absolved from blame in the transaction, and was again elected governor. The chief events of his successive administrations were the long controversy with New York, New Hampshire, and Massachusetts over their respective claims to Vermont territory, including the matter of the East and West Unions; the long-continued efforts to induce the impotent and vacillating Continental Congress to recognize Vermont as an independent state; her final admission into the Union by the Federal Congress in 1791; the Haldimand negotiations, in which the governor took a leading part; and the legislation of 1781-85 by which property titles, much confused from conflicting grants and repeated sales, foreclosures, and confiscations, were finally established on a basis of substantial equity. The East Union was first formed in 1778; 16 towns east of the Connecticut, having probably in mind the higher tax rates existing in New Hampshire, asked to be brought under Vermont jurisdiction, and the Vermont Legislature, disregarding New Hampshire's rights in the matter, formally annexed them; but the following year, relying upon a promise by Congress to recognize her as an independent state provided she would abandon her claims to these towns, she relinquished all authority over them; this promise not having been kept, however, and New Hampshire and New York continuing to press their pretensions to Vermont territory, she retaliated in 1780 by not only reestablishing the East Union, but also by annexing that part of New York lying east of the Hudson River and adjacent to her own western boundary, the people there, restive under the patroon system, having much in common with her own inhabitants; this was known as the West Union; but two years later at the friendly suggestion of General Washington in a letter to the governor, both Unions were dissolved; and Chittenden enjoys the unique distinction of being the only Vermont governor under whom a session of the Vermont Legislature was held on what was properly foreign soil, which occurred at Charlestown, N. H., in 1781.

ROBINSON, MOSES. Governor 1789-90. Born Hardwick, Mass., March 20, 1741; died Bennington, May 26, 1813; son of Samuel Robinson, one of the early settlers in the Grants. Is said to have been educated at Dartmouth College. Married Mary Fay, and, after her death, Susannah Howe. First town clerk of Bennington 1762, and served as such 18 years; a colonel of militia in 1777, and present at St. Clair's evacuation of Ticonderoga; in the same year became a member of the council of safety, which directed the affairs of the state until the election of a state government the following March; from that time until 1785 a member of the governor's council, whose functions were practically those of the present state senate; also, the first chief justice of the state supreme court, from the organization of that court until 1789; in 1782 an agent for the state before the Continental Congress; and one of the commissioners who finally settled the controversy with New York. Governor Chittenden being suspected of having, with the consent of a portion of the council, fraudulently granted certain public lands to Ira Allen, and having lost for the time being much of his popularity, the vote for governor in 1789 stood as follows: Chittenden,

1,263; Robinson, 746; Samuel Safford, 478; for all other candidates, 378; and, there being no election by the people, Robinson was chosen governor by the General Assembly; defeated for reelection in 1790 by Chittenden. Upon the admission of Vermont into the Union in 1791, he was elected U. S. senator for the full term of six years, Stephen R. Bradley being elected for the short term; a follower of Thomas Jefferson, he opposed the Jay treaty with England, not only in the senate, but at public meetings in Vermont; and, becoming convinced that the state at large was strongly Federalist and that he did not voice the will of a majority of the people whom he represented, he resigned his seat in October, 1796, and was succeeded by Isaac Tichenor, the Federalist leader. Robinson's only further public service was as member of the General Assembly in 1802.

BRIGHAM, PAUL. Acting governor from Aug. 25 to Oct. 16, 1797. Born Coventry, Conn., Jan. 17, 1746; died Norwich, June 15, 1824. Rose from the ranks to be captain in the Connecticut militia; was three years in the Continental service; fought at Germantown, Monmouth, and elsewhere. Came to Vermont 1781, and settled at Norwich; rose to prominence in Windsor County; was successively high sheriff, judge of probate, assistant judge and chief judge of the county court; represented Norwich in the General Assembly 1783, 1786, and 1791; was presidential elector 1792; delegate to the constitutional conventions of 1793, 1814, and 1822; one of the four major-generals of militia in 1794; for several years a member of the governor's council; lieutenant-governor 1796-7; became acting governor on the death of Governor Chittenden in 1797. Originally a Federalist, he drifted gradually into the Jeffersonian ranks, yet served as lieutenant-governor 1797-1813, and 1815-20, with both Federalist and Democratic governors.

TICHENOR, ISAAC. Governor 1797-1807, 1808-9. Born Newark, N. J., Feb. 8, 1754; died Bennington, Dec. 11, 1838. Graduated from Princeton, then known as the College of New Jersey, under the presidency of Dr. Witherspoon; studied law at Schenectady, N. Y., where he was in 1777 appointed an assistant to commissary-general Cuyler in buying supplies for the northern department of the Continental army; on this duty came to Bennington in the summer of that year, and remained there and in that vicinity collecting the supplies whose accumulation tempted the fatal expedition of Burgoyne to Bennington; had just left, Aug. 13, with a drove of cattle for Albany when the tidings of that expedition were received; returned by way of Williams-town, reaching the field at dusk on the evening of the 17th, the day after the battle; decided to settle in Bennington, and this was his home when not in actual service in the commissary department; in the line of his duty he incurred heavy pecuniary responsibilities, which embarrassed him through a large part of his life. About the close of the war began the practice of law in Bennington; was town representative in 1781-84; speaker of the House in the General Assembly 1783; and an agent to Congress in 1782; in that year was sent by the Legislature to Windham County to urge the claims of the new state on the people, many of whom still favored the claims of New York, and quell the disturbances there, and the mission had considerable effect, though severer measures were necessary later; was a commissioner under the act of 1789 to determine the terms of settlement with New York. He had been steadily growing in reputation among the Vermont leaders, and the peculiar value of his services with his plausible, persuasive ways added much to his prominence; was a judge of the supreme court from 1791 to 1796, and chief justice the last two years, when, on the resignation of Moses Robinson from the U. S. Senate, he was chosen to fill out the latter's unexpired term; was reelected the next year for a full term of six years, but he was also elected governor that fall, and resigned the senatorship to accept. He had then become the recognized Federalist leader of the state, and the canvass for the governorship had been a sharp one between him and the Anti-Federalist and other candidates. The death of Governor Chittenden had loosed the restraint upon partisanship so long exercised by him, and the result of the election was no choice by the people for governor; but Tichenor was elected by the Legislature by a large majority; served eleven years in all as governor, being reelected every year until 1809, except in 1807, when he was defeated by the Democrats under the leadership of Israel Smith; so strong had he become that he was reelected several times after his party had become a minority. He was in 1814 again elected senator to Congress, serving six years, until March 3, 1821, when with the complete obliteration of his party from American politics he retired to private life, after a public service filling 38 out of the 44 years between 1777 and 1821. He died at the age of 84, leaving no descendants.

SMITH, ISRAEL. Governor 1807-8. Born Sheffield, Conn., April 4, 1759; died Rutland, Dec. 2, 1810. Graduated from Yale College 1781; two years later settled at Rupert, where he was admitted to the Bar; represented that town in the General Assembly in 1785, and 1788-90, and became prominent in the affairs of the state during the latter part of the period of its independent existence; was one of the commission in 1789 to close the controversy with New York; a member of the convention in 1791 that ratified the federal constitution preparatory to the admission of the state into the Union; in this year moved to Rutland; was elected one of the first representatives in Congress from the western district of the state; twice reelected, until in 1797 he was at last defeated by Matthew Lyon, who had twice before contested the election with him, though he and Lyon were both identified with the Jeffersonian party; was that fall elected to the Legislature from Rutland, and, the Jeffersonian Republicans being in a majority, was elected chief justice of the supreme court; held the position only one term; for the next year came a return of Federalist control; in 1801, was again elected to the chief justiceship, but declined; was that fall the Republican candidate for governor against Tichenor, but was defeated; was, however, again elected representative to Congress, and at the end of the term elected U. S. senator over Chipman. In 1807 the Republicans were finally able to overcome for a short time the great popularity of Governor Tichenor in the state and elected Smith governor; he resigned his seat in the senate to accept the place. In his inaugural he advocated several new ideas, among which were the state supervision of schools and of highways, the substitution of imprisonment at hard labor for corporal punishment, and the construction of a state prison; but the farmers of the state were too accustomed to government of the utmost frugality to welcome such plans, and, though the Republicans had now secured an easy ascendancy in the state, which cast its electoral vote for Madison that fall, Smith was defeated for reelection 1808 by Tichenor, after a hard fought campaign, by a plurality of 859 and majority of 432.

GALUSHA, JONAS. Governor 1809-13, 1815-20. Born Norwich, Conn., Feb. 11, 1753; died Shaftsbury, Sept. 24, 1834. Married for his first wife Mary, daughter of Governor Thomas Chittenden, and thus was brother-in-law of his life-long political opponent, Governor Martin Chittenden. Came to Vermont 1775, and settled at Shaftsbury; was captain of one of the town's two militia companies; commanded them both in the battle of Bennington, and saw much active service from 1777 to 1780; was, by occupation a farmer and inn-keeper. His first political office was that of sheriff of Bennington County 1781-7, and as such he did prompt and efficient work in preventing Shay's men during their rebellion in Massachusetts from making Vermont soil a base of operations; was state councilor 1793-8, and again 1801-5; judge of the county court 1795-7, and again 1800-6; had, as soon as well-defined political parties had developed, become an ardent Jeffersonian Republican, and the recognized leader of the party in state politics; after the defeat of Governor Smith, by Tichenor in 1808, was made the next Republican candidate and elected, by a vote of 14,583 to 13,467 for Tichenor, and reelected 1810-12, and again 1815-19, a service of nine years; was presidential elector 1808, 1820, and 1824; member of the constitutional conventions of 1814 and 1822. His party was rapidly becoming the dominant party in the state, when the New England feeling against the war of 1812 caused a temporary reaction. At the election of 1813 the two leading candidates, Galusha and Martin Chittenden, received nearly an equal share of the votes; but, neither having a majority, the election was sent, as was often the case in those days, to the General Assembly, where, the council being Republican and the House Federalist, a long and acrimonious discussion ensued, the vote being a tie between the two candidates. The result turned on the vote of Colchester, where, it was claimed, certain U. S. soldiers not entitled to participate in the election had cast their ballots; if Colchester's vote were rejected, three Federalist councilors would be returned in place of three Republican councilors. The council having no authority to decide its own membership, the House assumed the responsibility, seated the three Federalists, and Chittenden was declared elected by a vote of 112 to 111, against the violent protest of the Republicans. In 1814 the choice, between the same two candidates, was again thrown into the Assembly, and Chittenden again elected. But 1815 witnessed a revolution on both state and national lines. Galusha defeated Chittenden handsomely at the polls, 18,055 to 16,632. The next year the Federalists made Samuel Strong their candidate, and were more badly defeated, 17,262 to 13,888. In 1817 the Federalists tried Tichenor again for a candidate, and were beaten almost two to one, 13,756 to 7,430. By 1819 there was no organized opposition to Galusha left, less than 3,000 votes being cast for various candidates against him, and the bulk of these for other Republicans, W. C. Bradley and Dudley Chase. Among his recommendations to the Legislature, it is interesting to note, as a sign of the times, that he urged, in 1819, legislation to free the bodies of debtors from arrest and imprisonment on debts of small amount, being "of opinion that more money is spent in the collection of such debts than is saved by the collection," and arguing that it would be a benefit to "discourage credit."

CHITTENDEN, MARTIN. Governor 1813-15. Born Salisbury, Conn., March 12, 1769; died Williston, Sept. 5, 1840; second son of Gov. Thomas and Elizabeth (Meigs) Chittenden. Graduated from Dartmouth College 1789. In 1796 married Anna Bentley. Came to Vermont with his father 1774, at the age of five; after his graduation, lived for a few years in Jericho, afterwards in Williston. Representative in the General Assembly from Jericho eight years, and from Williston two years; clerk of Chittenden county court 1789-93; judge of county court ten years, and judge of probate two years; representative in Congress 1803-13, until his election as governor in the latter year; for the circumstances attending that election, see preceding sketch of Governor Galusha. Was the last Federalist governor of Vermont; joined with his party and with New England generally in condemning the war of 1812 as "unnecessary, unwise, and hopeless in its offensive operations." In November, 1813, issued a proclamation recalling a brigade of Vermont militia then stationed at Plattsburgh, on the grounds that the brigade was needed for the defense of the Vermont frontier, and that it was unconstitutional for Vermont troops to leave the state except with the governor's consent; for this act, was bitterly assailed by the Republicans; and the officers of the brigade insolently refused to obey the governor's orders, although the men, tired of inaction at Plattsburgh, soon after returned of their own accord. In the spring of 1814, during Chittenden's first term, a flotilla of small war vessels was constructed at Vergennes, under Lieutenant, afterward Commodore, Macdonough; earthworks, since known as Fort Cassin, after Lieutenant Cassin of the U. S. navy, were thrown up at the mouth of Otter Creek; and May 14 the earthworks and the completed vessels repelled an attack by a British fleet which was attempting to enter the creek in order to destroy the latter. On the approach of the invasion from Canada in 1814 under Gen. Sir George Provost, the governor, still maintaining that the militia, as such, should not be allowed to serve outside the borders of the state, yet issued a call for volunteers, and Vermont troops to the number of 2,500 took part in the land engagements at Plattsburgh Sept. 11, while Macdonough on the lake achieved a complete victory over the British fleet and thus brought the invasion to a close, the cannonading being distinctly heard at Burlington and many other Vermont towns. In the fall election of 1814, Chittenden, while slightly leading his opponent and brother-in-law, Galusha, still failed of having a popular majority of the votes, but was elected by a safe majority in the General Assembly; but its attitude toward the war completed the downfall of the Federalist party in the state and the rest of New England, where it had made its last stand; and he retired from public life at the close of his second term.

SKINNER, RICHARD. Governor 1820-3. Born Litchfield, Conn., May 30, 1778; died May 23, 1853, from injuries received by being thrown from his carriage while crossing the Green Mountains; son of Gen. Timothy Skinner. Studied law in Connecticut; came to Vermont in September, 1799, settling at Manchester; was states attorney for Bennington County 1800-12, serving also as judge of probate during the last six years of that period; representative in Congress 1813-5; represented Manchester in the General Assembly two years, being speaker of the House in 1817; judge of the state supreme court 1815-7; in 1817 was elected chief justice, but declined to accept; was again states attorney for his county in 1819; in 1820 in the era of "good feeling" was elected governor by nearly a unanimous vote, 13,152 to 934 scattering; was re-elected in 1821 with still greater unanimity, 12,434 to 163; and again in 1822, though the record of the vote cannot be found; declined further re-election, but was the next fall chosen chief justice of the supreme court, and served until 1829, when he retired from public life.

VAN NESS, CORNELIUS P. Governor 1823-6. Born Kinderhook, N. Y., Jan. 26, 1782; died Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 15, 1852; son of Peter Van Ness, and descended from a wealthy and prominent Dutch family. Studied law at Kinderhook in the office of his brother, where Martin Van Buren was a fellow-student. In 1804 married Rhoda Savage of Chatham, N. Y., who died at Madrid, Spain, July 18, 1834; afterward married a Spanish woman for his second wife. Practiced law at Kinderhook two years; came to Vermont 1806, settling at St. Albans; removed to Burlington 1809; appointed U. S. district attorney for Vermont 1810; still holding that position, was also appointed 1813 U. S. collector of customs at Burlington, serving until the close of the war; then named as one of the commissioners under the treaty of Ghent to settle the boundary line between the United States and the British possessions, to which task he devoted several years, although no agreement was reached with the British commissioners; represented Burlington in the General Assembly 1818-20; chief justice of the Vermont supreme court 1821-3; governor for three terms 1823-6; declined further re-election; did the honors for the state during Lafayette's visit in 1825. During his service as governor a political change began to manifest itself in the state. At first strongly Federalist, Vermont had cast her electoral vote for Jefferson in 1804, and since that time had been republican at every presidential election, though occasionally electing Federalist governors such as Tichenor and Martin Chittenden. With the collapse of the Federalist party, the Republicans had been for some years practically unopposed; but with the Missouri compromise a line of cleavage began to show itself in the Republican party, and the party began to split in two in the presidential campaign of 1824, when there were four candidates for president in the field. One faction, under the leadership of John Quincy Adams and Henry Clay, both of whom were candidates, began to call themselves National Republicans, and, combining with the small remnants of the Federalists, became the Whigs of a few years later. The other, represented by Andrew Jackson, was known first as the Jackson party, but soon began to style themselves Democratic-Republicans, a name still in use by Tammany Hall in New York City, and later simply Democrats. Vermont cast her vote for Adams in 1824, and has ever since, for nearly ninety years, voted for the presidential candidate opposed to the Democratic party. Van Ness, even before retiring from the governorship, began an active canvass for election to the U. S. Senate, as successor to Senator Horatio Seymour, who also announced himself a candidate for re-election. The ensuing struggle between the two was the bitterest personal contest the state has ever witnessed, and aroused animosities that severely injured the popularity Van Ness had enjoyed. When the legislature finally met, Seymour was elected senator by a small majority. Van Ness attributed his defeat to the influence of the Adams administration. He issued a manifesto to the people declaring hostility to Adams, and went to work actively to organize Jackson support in the state. He was involved, as a consequence of the manifesto, in a number of controversies with men who had long been in his confidence and friendship. Before the election of 1828 his old power had been pretty generally broken, and the state cast its vote for Adams by a strong majority. Shortly after Jackson's inauguration, however, he was appointed minister to Spain, and continued to occupy this position for about ten years. He returned to the country and state in 1840, and made a determined effort to carry Vermont for his old friend Van Buren, but with even less success than in the campaign of 1828, and the next spring he left Vermont and took up his home in New York City. He was for a year and a half, in 1844-45, collector of the port of New York by appointment of President Tyler. This was his last political position. The death of his brother, General Van Ness, at Washington, in 1846, devolved the care of the latter's estate on him, and he spent much of his time in Washington until his death. By his first marriage he had three sons and two daughters. The second son, Cornelius, was secretary of the Texan republic at his death in 1842; the third son, George, died in Texas in 1855 while a collector of customs. The elder daughter married Lord Onseley of the British legation at Washington; the younger, Cornelia, a famous beauty of her time, married Judge J. J. Roosevelt of the New York supreme court.

BUTLER, EZRA. Governor 1826-8. Born Lancaster, Mass., Sept. 24, 1763; son of Asaph and Jane (McAllister) Butler; died Waterbury, July 12, 1838. Married Tryphena Diggins. Came to Vermont with his father in early youth, settling at West Windsor; but the death of his mother necessitated the boy's spending most of his time in the family of an older brother, and his taking care of himself after he was fourteen, so that he had only six months of schooling. He went to work on the farm of Dr. Stearns at Claremont, N. H., soon having the entire management of it. At the age of seventeen he was a soldier in the Revolutionary army; and early in 1785, when twenty years old, having spent a few months in Weathersfield, he and his brother came to Waterbury, where they built a log house, to which Mr. Butler, in June of that year, brought his bride, making the journey into the wilderness on horseback by way of a bridle path. They were the second family to settle in Waterbury and suffered all the privations and hardships of pioneer life. Elected first town clerk of Waterbury 1790; represented Waterbury in the General Assembly 1794-7 and 1799-1805; in 1807 was elected both representative and member of the executive council, serving a part of the time in one body, and a part in the other; presidential elector 1804, 1820, and 1832; member of the council of censors 1806; member of the executive council 1807-12; a trustee of the University of Vermont 1810-16; was a supporter of Jonas Galusha in state politics, and rose steadily to a position of recognized leadership; representative in Congress 1813-15, during the war with England, and was an ardent supporter of the Madison administration; was defeated for re-election by a Federalist in 1814, owing to the New England feeling against the war; again member of the executive council 1815-26; in 1812 and again in 1815 was chief justice of Jefferson (now Washington) county court, serving from the latter year until 1825, when the present judiciary system was established; was then elected first assistant judge; was a member of the constitutional convention of 1822; in 1826 and again in 1827 was elected governor, no opposing candidate being named, although at each election Joel Doolittle received about 2,000 votes. His most notable work as governor was his strenuous opposition to lotteries and his efforts for the abolishment of imprisonment for debt. Declining a third term as governor, he retired to private life, but took part in the anti-Masonic movement in politics which made its appearance at this time. In addition to his other activities, he was an elder in the Baptist Church for forty years, and was pastor of the church at Waterbury from its organization until within a few years of his death, serving it without salary or other remuneration.

CRAFTS, SAMUEL C. Governor 1828-31. Born Woodstock, Conn., Oct. 6, 1768; son of Col. Ebenezer Crafts, one of the first settlers of Craftsbury, and after whom the town was named; died Nov. 19, 1853. In 1798 married Eunice Todd of Hartford, Conn.; graduated from Harvard College in 1790; then accompanied his father into the wilderness; two years later, on the organization of the town of Craftsbury, was elected its first town clerk, and held the position for 37 consecutive years, even while his public duties called him away from home a large part of the time; was in the convention to revise the state constitution in 1793, being its youngest member, and even then showed marked aptitude for public affairs; in 1796 was Craftsbury's representative in the General Assembly; in 1798 and 1799 was clerk of the House; the next year was again on the floor, being re-elected in 1801, 1803, and 1805; was register of probate for the Orleans district from 1796 to 1815; judge of the Orleans county court from 1800 to 1810; chief judge for the next six years; twenty years later, from 1836 to 1838, after he had filled the highest positions in the state, he was clerk of the court; in 1809 he was elected a member of the executive council, serving for three years, and again from 1825 to 1827; at this time also, from 1825 to 1828, he was again chief judge of county court; in 1816 was elected representative in Congress and served eight years, usefully and industriously, but without any great distinction or prominence in the national battles of those times; afterward was U. S. senator for a few months, from December, 1842, to March, 1843, being appointed by Governor Paine, and also chosen by the legislature to fill out the unexpired term of Samuel Prentiss, who had resigned to become U. S. district judge; elected governor 1828, and re-elected 1829 and 1830. His first election was practically unopposed. The next year, however, the anti-Masonic movement made its first appearance in Vermont politics. The movement had begun in 1826 in western New York, where it was alleged that one William Morgan had been abducted and killed by Masons in revenge for having revealed the secrets of the order. An intense feeling against the order spread rapidly over the country, and resulted in the existence for half a dozen years of the so-called Anti-Masonic party, the chief article of whose faith was opposition to the supposed influence of Masonry in public affairs. At the state election of 1829 the anti-Masons polled 7,347 votes, against less than twice that number for Governor Crafts, with nearly 4,000 cast for Joel Doolittle, who about this time was the chronic candidate of the new Jackson Democracy. In 1830 William A. Palmer, the Anti-Masonic candidate, received nearly 11,000 votes, and, there being no election by the people, it required 32 ballots in the Legislature to re-elect Governor Crafts. The following year he retired from politics, although he was an unsuccessful candidate for governor in 1832, and was presidential elector on the Harrison and Tyler ticket in 1840.

PALMER, WILLIAM A. Governor 1831-5. Born Hebron, Conn., Sept. 12, 1781; son of Joshua and Susanna Palmer; died Danville, Dec. 3, 1860. In 1813 married Sarah Blanchard of Danville. Had only a common school education, but studied law in Connecticut and, after coming to Vermont, with Daniel Buck at Chelsea; practiced law at St. Johnsbury for a few years; then removed to Danville, where he engaged in farming for the rest of his life when not employed in public office; was eight years county clerk and judge of probate for Caledonia County; in 1816 was for one year a judge of the supreme court, declining another election; was six times representative from Danville in the General Assembly; became one of the Republican leaders in the state; in 1817 was elected to the U. S. Senate to fill out the unexpired term of James Fisk, resigned; and then for a full term of six years, ending in 1825. While in the Senate, he incurred much unpopularity in his home state by voting in 1819 for the admission of Missouri into the Union with her proslavery constitution, and by voting in the following year for the Missouri compromise bill, being probably the only Vermont senator who ever voted for a slavery bill; but he always maintained that he was right in so voting, not because he believed in slavery, but because he believed in state sovereignty and the right of a state to settle its internal affairs in its own way. He again represented Danville in the General Assembly in 1826 and 1827. Having a profound belief in the evil of all secret societies, he championed the anti-Masonic movement when it appeared in Vermont, and in 1830 was the unsuccessful anti-Masonic candidate for governor against Governor Crafts, as related in the preceding sketch. In 1831 he was again a candidate, and obtained a plurality, though not a majority of the popular vote, but was elected governor by the Legislature, after nine ballots, by a majority of one. In 1832 he also failed of an election by the people, but was again elected governor by the Legislature, after 43 ballots, by a majority of two. In 1833 he received a popular majority. In 1834, however, he was once more elected by the Legislature, this time on the first ballot; but in 1835, though he had a large plurality both of the popular vote and of the votes in the Legislature the latter, after taking 63 indecisive ballots, adjourned without making any election, and Silas H. Jennison, who had been elected lieutenant-governor, became the acting governor. In 1837 Governor Palmer was a state senator from Caledonia County, and this service closed his public career.

JENNISON, SILAS H. Acting governor 1835-6, and governor 1836-41. The first Vermont-born governor of the state; born Shoreham, May 17, 1791; son of Levi and Ruth Hemenway Jennison; died September, 1849. Lost his father when a year old; had only a few weeks' schooling each year, being obliged to work most of the time when a mere boy, but educated himself through reading and private study. Represented Shoreham in the General Assembly 1826-31; associate justice Addison county court 1829-35; member of the executive council; elected lieutenant-governor 1835, but became acting governor by the failure to elect a governor, as related in the preceding sketch; elected governor as a Whig 1836 and the four following years. In 1836, while he was governor, occurred the first session of the Vermont state senate, which took the place of the former executive council. In 1837, at the breaking out of the Papineau rebellion in Canada, he issued a proclamation, warning against any violation of the neutrality laws, as there was much sympathy among our people with the rebels. This affected his popularity for the time being, but later his firmness and good judgment came to be appreciated. At the close of his governorship he declined a renomination, but served as judge of probate 1841-7, and was a delegate to the constitutional convention of 1843.

PAINE, CHARLES. Governor 1841-3. Born April 15, 1799; son of Judge Elijah Paine; died in Texas, July 6, 1853. Graduated from Harvard College. Took charge of his father's business affairs; was one of the leading projectors of the Vermont Central R. R., and its first president; interested foreign capital in it; rode on the first train over its tracks, Oct. 11, 1848, to Northfield, where he had settled; built and conducted for years a large hotel at Depot Village; was Whig candidate for governor in 1835, when the Whig party began to emerge from the confusion of the anti-Masonic movement; was elected governor in 1841, and again the following year; was interested in agriculture, cattle breeding, and many important business enterprises; and died while exploring a route through Texas for a railway to the Pacific.

MATTOCKS, JOHN. Governor 1843-4. Born Hartford, Conn., March 4, 1777; son of Samuel Mattocks, a captain in the Revolutionary army; died Aug. 14, 1847. Married Esther Newell of Peacham. Came to Vermont when a year old with his father, who became a member of the Legislature, a judge, and succeeded Ira Allen as state treasurer; when 15 went to live with his sister at Middlebury, where he began the study of law, which he continued later at Fairfield; was admitted to the Bar February, 1797; began practice at Danville, but soon removed to Peacham; in 1806 was one of the 13 directors of the Vermont State Bank; represented Peacham in the General Assembly 1807, 1815, 1816, 1823, and 1824; was brigadier-general of the state militia 1812; representative in Congress 1821-3, 1825-7, and 1841-3; delegate to the constitutional convention of 1836; candidate of the Whigs for governor in 1843, and elected by a vote of 24,465 to 21,982 for Judge Daniel Kellogg, the Democratic candidate; and declined a renomination the following year.

SLADE, WILLIAM. Governor 1844-6. Born Cornwall, 1786; son of Col. William Slade, a Revolutionary veteran who was sheriff of Addison County for several years; died Jan. 18, 1859. He graduated from Middlebury College in 1807, studied law, and was admitted to the Bar in 1810. But his attention was soon absorbed in journalism and politics, and in historical and literary studies; was a Madison presidential elector in 1812; in 1814-16 edited the Columbian Patriot, a political paper at Middlebury, where he also kept a book store; in 1816 was made secretary of state, and held the position for eight years; from 1817 to 1823 was also judge of Addison county court, and was afterwards states attorney; before the close of the Monroe administration was appointed clerk in the state department in Washington, and served until 1829, when he had to "go" under Jackson; in 1830 was elected representative to Congress, serving continuously from 1831 to 1843; delivered a speech, Dec. 20, 1837, on a petition for the abolition of the slave trade in the District of Columbia, and though the speech was suppressed by a vote of the House, the pluck with which he presented the case and the skill and coolness with which he prodded the slavocracy to desperation, were well worthy of admiration; his speech on the tariff bill of 1842 was also regarded as a strong one for the protectionist side of the argument, especially for its wool schedule, and it was widely published and circulated by the Whigs; on his retirement from Congress in 1843 was appointed reporter of the decisions of the Vermont supreme court, but held this position only one year, being elected governor of the state in 1844, and again in 1845. One of the interesting episodes of Vermont politics in those days was the "war of pamphlets" between him and Senator Phelps in 1845 and 1846, growing out of the charges made against the senator before his re-election in 1844, that he had been inclined to kick out of the party traces and to refuse to vote for the tariff bill of 1842 and against the land distribution bill, and that he had impaired his usefulness by excessive intemperance, violence of temper, and coarseness of language. Slade was at the time governor and claimed that Phelps had got him nominated to silence these accusations. He had been an aspirant for the senator's seat, as also had Hiland Hall, and these two with Ezra Meech and Charles Adams fathered the reports, as Phelps claimed. The thing was fought out in the Whig convention and in the Legislature, which appointed a committee of investigation. Phelps won at both points, and then in the following winter published an "Appeal" to the people of Vermont in his vindication, reviewing the charges, producing letters from a large number of his colleagues and associates to show the baselessness of the charges. Slade followed with a "reply," then Phelps with a "rejoinder" and Slade with another address "To the People of Vermont," in which they handled each other severely and with a personal bitterness that would be irreparably damaging to the author in these days. Soon after retiring from the governorship, he became secretary of the national board of popular education, having for its object the furnishing of the West with teachers from the East, and held this position at the time of his death. He was the compiler of "Slade's State Papers."

EATON, HORACE. Governor 1846-8. Born Barnard, June 22, 1804; son of Dr. Eliphaz and Polly (Barnes) Eaton; died July 4, 1855. Removed with his parents to Enosburg when two years of age; attended the district schools until 15; prepared for college at St. Albans Academy; and graduated from Middlebury College 1825, having taught school every winter to help pay his expenses. Taught at Middlebury Academy for two years after graduation; then returned to Enosburg and studied medicine with his father, and also attended medical lectures at Castleton, where he received his diploma; continued at Enosburg in the practice of his profession in company with his father until the latter's retirement, then alone, and still later in company with his brother, Dr. Rollin Eaton; was town clerk for a number of years, representative in the Legislature six different times, and once in the constitutional council; in 1837 he was elected state senator, and again in 1839, being re-elected three times; was nominated by the Whigs for lieutenant-governor in 1843, on the ticket with Governor Mattocks, and elected, and was re-elected on the ticket with Governor Slade for his two terms; in 1846 was the party nominee for governor, and was elected by a plurality of 5,763, the largest the Whigs had up to this time obtained, except in presidential years, and he was re-elected the next year; on his retirement from the governor's chair he was called to Middlebury College to take the post of professor of natural history and chemistry, which he held for about six years until his death. Governor Eaton was twice married, first, Aug. 14, 1821, to Cordelia L. Fuller, who died Feb. 7, 1841; and December, 1841, to Miss Edna Palmer. There were two children, but only one, Mrs. R. D. Ross of Missouri, lived to reach maturity.

COOLIDGE, CARLOS. Governor 1848-50. Born Windsor, June 25, 1792; son of Nathan and Elizabeth (Curtis) Coolidge; died Windsor, Aug. 14, 1866. After graduation he commenced the study of law with Peter Starr of Middlebury, with whom he remained about two years, and then returning to Windsor completed his legal studies with Hon. Jonathan H. Hubbard; was admitted to the Windsor County Bar at the September term, 1814, and established himself in practice in his native town; in 1831 was elected states attorney for the county of Windsor, and was successively re-elected for five terms; was a member of the first board of bank commissioners, appointed under a statute enacted in 1831; in 1834 was elected to represent Windsor in the Legislature, and re-elected during the two succeeding years, being speaker in 1836, and was also representative and speaker of the House in 1839, 1840, and 1841; in 1845 was presidential elector and assisted in giving the vote of Vermont to Henry Clay; was the candidate of the Whig party for governor in 1848, and, no election being made by the people, was chosen by the Legislature; in the same way was re-elected in 1849; was a senator from Windsor County for three years, 1853-5, and was frequently called upon to act as president pro tempore of the Senate and Joint Assembly. He married Harriet Bingham of Claremont, N. H., by whom he had one son, who died in early childhood, and one daughter, Mary, who married Rev. Franklin Butler. He received the honorary degree of A. M. from the University of Vermont in 1835, and that of LL. D. from his alma mater in 1849.

WILLIAMS, CHARLES KILBORN. Governor 1850-2. Born Cambridge, Mass., Jan. 24, 1782; son of the Rev. Samuel Williams, LL. D., and Jane Kilborn Williams; died very suddenly at Rutland, March 9, 1853. He came to Vermont with his father in 1790; graduated at Williams College in 1800, and locating at Rutland, continued to reside there until his death; studied law with Cephas Smith of Rutland, then clerk of the U. S. courts for the district of Vermont; was admitted to the Bar in March, 1803; was appointed a tutor in Williams College in 1802, and about the same time received a similar appointment from Middlebury College, both of which he declined; served one campaign on the north frontier in the war of 1812; represented Rutland in the Legislature 1809, 1811, 1814, 1815, 1820, 1821, and 1849; was states attorney of Rutland County in 1815; was elected judge of the supreme court of Vermont in 1822, 1823, and 1824, declining the last election; was appointed collector of customs for Vermont in 1825 and held the position until October, 1829, when he resigned, being again elected one of the judges of the Vermont supreme court; to this office he received seventeen successive annual elections; retired from the bench in 1849, declining a re-election; in 1850, and again in 1851, he was elected governor by a majority of the popular vote. In 1827 he was appointed one of the state commissioners for common schools, a board to select and recommend suitable textbooks and to have general supervision over educational affairs of the state; was a member of the corporation of Middlebury College from 1827 to 1843, and, at the time of his death, was president of the society of the alumni of Williams College. He received the degree of M. A. from Middlebury and Williams Colleges in 1803, and that of LL. D. from the former in 1834.

FAIRBANKS, ERASTUS. Governor 1852-3 and 1860-1. Born Brimfield, Mass., Oct. 28, 1792; son of Joseph Fairbanks, a farmer, carpenter, and mill owner; died Nov. 20, 1864. Was educated in the common schools; taught school for two terms; came to Vermont about 1812, and began the study of law in the office of his uncle, Judge Ephraim Paddock of St. Johnsbury, but gave up the study owing to some trouble with his eyes. Kept a general store for 11 years, first at Wheelock, then at East St. Johnsbury, and afterward at Barnet; returned to St. Johnsbury and entered into business with his next younger brother, Thaddeus Fairbanks, as manufacturers of stoves, plows, etc.; in 1829 the brothers added to their business the purchase and preparation of hemp for market; the rude and inaccurate mode of weighing their purchases led to the invention of the platform scale by them; the demand for the new scale compelled the brothers to relinquish other business interests; Thaddeus gave the strength of his inventive genius to the improvement and manufacture of the scale, while Erastus with his genius for business, gave the concern a wide and solid financial success, though they had their full share of struggles and misfortunes; a fire and a freshet in 1828 compelled them to ask for a two years' extension from their creditors, which was cordially granted. In 1836 Erastus Fairbanks was elected to represent the town in the state Legislature, and was re-elected for the two succeeding years; in 1844, and again in 1848, he was chosen a presidential elector for the state; in 1848 he was appointed with Charles K. Williams and Lucius B. Peck to prepare a general railroad law, and also one relating to manufacturing corporations, and their report still remains embodied in the statutes of the state. In 1850 he was active in the construction of the Passumpsic R. R., and was for years president of the company. He was also a leading and efficient member of the company that constructed the Sault Ste. Marie canal. In 1852 he was elected governor by the Legislature, having fallen a few hundred short of a majority in the popular vote, because of the candidacy of Brainerd and the Liberal party. In the closing days of the Legislature of that year the law for the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors was passed, which, with some amendment, was the law of the state for half a century, until repealed by the Legislature of 1902; Governor Fairbanks signed it, and in consequence was defeated for re-election the next year. The figures and particulars of that interesting contest are given in the sketch of Governor Robinson, his successful competitor. The Whigs desired to fight out the issue in 1854 with Governor Fairbanks again as a candidate, but he declined a nomination because of his business engagements. In 1860, however, the Republican convention unanimously made him its candidate, and he was easily elected over John G. Saxe, the poet, Democratic candidate. His administration in 1861 secured for him a reputation as a "man with a brain and conscience." He called an extra session of the Legislature eight days after the assault on Sumter, and it placed $1,000,000 at his disposal without check on his discretion, for the arming and forwarding of troops, but at his earnest request a committee was appointed at the October session to audit his accounts. The first six regiments of the state, of the famous

"Vermont Brigade," and the first company of sharp-shooters were organized and mustered into the service under his administration. He declined even to draw his salary and it still remains in the treasury. Prominent among his home charities may be mentioned the founding of the St. Johnsbury Academy, with his brothers; and his endowments assist in maintaining the Athenæum, the Museum of Natural Science, and the North Church. From 1849 until his death he was president of the Vermont Domestic Missionary Society, and for many years was a corporate member of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. He was married May 30, 1815, to Lois Crossman of Peacham. His married life continued to within a few months of half a century.

ROBINSON, JOHN S. Governor 1853-4. Born Bennington, Nov. 10, 1804; son of Nathan Robinson, and grandson of Gov. Moses Robinson; died Charleston, S. C., April 24, 1860, of apoplexy, while attending the Democratic national convention as chairman of the Vermont delegation. Graduated from Williams College 1824; admitted to the Vermont Bar 1827. A man of brilliant parts, he rapidly rose to the front rank of his profession and was well qualified for a distinguished political career, but the movement of the times had left his party in a hopeless minority in the state; twice represented Bennington in the lower House of the Legislature; was twice a state senator for Bennington County; was repeatedly the Democratic candidate for Congress in his district. There was a serious split in the organization growing out of the Free Soil movement of 1848, and continuing for several years until the Free Soilers merged into the Liberty, later the Republican, party. In 1851 he was the candidate of the minority element, or Free Soilers, for governor, receiving 6,686 votes to 14,950 for Timothy P. Redfield, the regular Democratic candidate, and 22,676 for Charles K. Williams, Whig. The next year the Democrats made him their regular candidate; and with a temporary increase of strength for the Liberty party, which cast 9,446 votes for Lawrence Brainerd, there was a failure to elect by the people, Robinson having 14,938 votes and Erastus Fairbanks, Whig, 23,795, and the choice was by the Legislature, which elected Fairbanks governor. The next year, 1853, the enactment of prohibition had given the Democrats renewed hope, and they made Robinson their candidate for governor again; and the result of the election was 20,849 for Fairbanks, 18,142 for Robinson, and 8,291 for Brainerd, again throwing the choice to the Legislature, where Robinson was elected. But it was only a year's triumph. It was the period of political breakup over the slavery issue, and of the foundation of the new Republican party. In July of the next summer, Brainerd presided over the first Republican state convention, and that fall was sent to the United States Senate. The polls in September showed the dropping out of the Liberty party, and except some 1,600 scattering votes among various candidates, the issue was between the two leading parties, and Stephen Royce was elected governor by a vote of 27,926, against 15,084 for Robinson. He was the only Democratic governor Vermont has had since the two terms of Gov. Ezra Butler, a period of 84 years. In 1847 he married Juliette Staniford, widow of William Robinson, but left no children.

ROYCE, STEPHEN. Governor 1854-6. Born Tinmouth, Aug. 12, 1787; son of Stephen Royce, a soldier in the Revolution, and Minerva (Marvin) Royce; died Nov. 11, 1868. Removed with his parents in 1791 to the present town of Franklin, and two years later to Berkshire. Graduated from Middlebury College 1807. Taught a district school one term; studied law with his uncle, Ebenezer Marvin, Jr., with whom he was afterward in partnership for a few years; practiced in Berkshire two years; in Sheldon six years, representing that town in the Legislature 1815 and 1816; states attorney for Franklin County 1816-8; removed to St. Albans 1817; represented St. Albans in the Legislature 1822, 1823, and 1824; delegate to the state constitutional convention 1823; elected a judge of the state supreme court 1825 and 1826; declined re-election, and resumed his law practice; in 1829 was again elected to the supreme court, serving continuously until 1852, when he declined further re-election; was chief justice of the court 1847-52; in 1854 was the Whig candidate for governor, and was elected by a large majority; re-elected 1855; retired to private life in 1856; was the last Whig governor of Vermont.

FLETCHER, RYLAND. Governor 1856-8. Born Cavendish, Feb. 18, 1799; son of Dr. Asaph and Sally (Green) Fletcher; died Proctorsville, Dec. 19, 1885. Had only a common school education; worked on his father's farm through his young manhood, teaching district school in the winters; joined the militia company at Cavendish when 18, becoming successively lieutenant, captain, major, lieutenant-colonel, colonel, and finally in 1835 brigadier-general; resigned in 1836 and went West, returning to Vermont a few months later; became a leader in the anti-slavery movement; in 1854, at the time of the practical fusion of the Whigs and the Liberty men, he was nominated and elected lieutenant-governor on the ticket with Governor Royce, and re-elected in 1855; in 1856 was elected the first Republican governor of the state by a majority of more than 23,000 over Henry Keyes, the Democratic candidate, and re-elected in 1857 by a slightly larger majority. During his administration, in 1857, the state capital at Montpelier, the second one to be erected on that site, was partially destroyed by fire, and plans were made for the construction of the present building. He represented Cavendish in the Legislature 1861 and 1862; was a member of the constitutional convention of 1870, and strongly favored the policy of biennial elections; was several times a presidential elector and a delegate to Republican national conventions. In 1829 he married Mary May of Westminster; his son, Col. Henry A. Fletcher, was lieutenant-governor of the state 1890-2.

HALL, HILAND. Governor 1858-60. Born Bennington, July 20, 1795; son of Deacon Nathaniel and Abigail (Hubbard) Hall; died Springfield, Mass., Dec. 18, 1885. Received a common school education, with one term at the Granville, N. Y., Academy. Taught district school for several terms; studied law, and was admitted to the Bar 1819; represented Bennington in the Legislature 1827; was clerk of the supreme and county court for Bennington County 1828; states attorney 1828-31; became a National Republican, a Whig, and finally a Republican; on the death of Congressman Jonathan Hunt was elected rep-representative to Congress, representing the south district of the state in Washington ten years, 1833-43, and declining further renomination; bank commissioner for Vermont 1843-6; judge of the Vermont supreme court 1846-50; second controller of the U. S. treasury 1850-1; on resigning, recommending as his successor Edward J. Phelps of Burlington; in 1851 was appointed by President Fillmore chairman of a land commission for California; returned to Vermont in the spring of 1854 and resumed the practice of law at Bennington; was a delegate to the first Republican national convention at Philadelphia in 1856; elected governor of the state in 1858 by a majority of more than 16,000 over Henry Keyes, the Democratic candidate, and re-elected in 1859 by a larger majority over John G. Saxe, the poet; was chairman of the Vermont delegation to the fruitless Peace Conference in February, 1861. He was a lifelong student of Vermont history; president for six years of the Vermont Historical Society; author of many historical articles and addresses, and of the "Early History of Vermont," a work of over 500 pages published in 1868; was actively interested in the construction of the Bennington battle monument. He received the honorary degree of LL. D. from the University of Vermont in 1857. In 1818 he married Dolly Tuttle Davis of Rockingham; and at a family reunion a few months before his death there were present 51 of his descendants.

HOLBROOK, FREDERICK. Governor 1861-3. Born East Windsor, Conn., Feb. 15, 1813; son of John and Sarah (Knowlton) Holbrook; died Brattleboro, April 27, 1909. Attended for two years the Berkshire Gymnasium, Pittsfield, Mass.; visited Europe in 1833. On his return he settled in Brattleboro and devoted himself to agriculture; contributed many articles to the agricultural press. Elected register of probate for the district of Marlboro 1847; represented Windham County in the state Senate 1849-50; acting as chairman of a special committee on agriculture, he prepared and proposed a memorial to Congress urging the establishment of a national bureau of agriculture; chosen in 1850 president of the Vermont State Agricultural Association, of which he was one of the founders, and delivered the first address before that body; elected to that position in eight consecutive annual elections; in 1861, the first year of the Civil War, nominated Republican candidate for governor of the state and elected by a handsome majority; re-elected 1862; as "war governor" for two years, during the darkest period of the Rebellion, responsibilities of the gravest character devolved upon him; under his guidance, Vermont was the first state in the Union to provide hospitals for its soldiers; after retiring from the governorship he declined all further offers of public office. At the time of his death he was in the ninety-seventh year of his age. In 1835 married Harriet Goodhue of Brattleboro; they had three children, Franklin F., William C., and John.

SMITH, JOHN GREGORY. Governor 1863-5. Born St. Albans, July 22, 1818; died St. Albans, Nov. 6, 1891; son of John Smith, a leading lawyer and public man of his generation, who represented St. Albans nine successive years in the Legislature; served one term in Congress, and became one of the pioneer railroad builders in Vermont. Graduated from the University of Vermont 1841, and later from the Yale law school. Became associated with his father in law and railroad business; after his father's death in 1858 succeeded him as director under the lease of the Vermont & Canada R. R. Represented St. Albans in the Legislature for three years, 1861-3, during the last two of which he was speaker of the House; nominated by the Republican party and elected governor of Vermont in 1863 and 1864; was the third and last of our "war governors," and under his administration several regiments were sent to the front; was chairman of the Vermont delegation to the Republican national conventions of 1872, 1880, and 1884. He was president of the Welden National Bank, the People's Trust Co., and the Franklin County Creamery Association, and was a life-long member of the Congregational Church. But it was in railroad affairs that he was most conspicuous. The Vermont Central R. R. had been built, 1847-9, from Woodstock to Burlington. The Vermont & Canada R. R. followed, 1848-51, running from Burlington to Rouses Point, but was leased, 1849, to the Vermont Central. Mortgages were placed on the property by the latter, and in 1854 deeds of surrender were given to the trustees for the bondholders under the mortgages; and later the Vermont & Canada began the first of its several unsuccessful suits for the recovery of its property. The roads ran down so, that in 1865 trust bonds began to be issued to provide for repairs, and from this Governor Smith, the president, advanced to a large policy of "development," forming by leases and purchases a great "through system of roads, all under the authority" of the court of chancery, and as an extension of the policy of repairs. The emissions of "trust" bonds continued until 1872, when $4,356,600 were out. When the financial panic struck the country, these structures tumbled, the rent payment to the Vermont & Canada was defaulted, notes went to protest, a legislative investigation was held, and a long and complicated litigation ensued. Governor Smith and his management, generally speaking, came out of the courts successful, but before the end was reached a compromise was effected by which new securities were issued to the different interests and the "Consolidated Railway of Vermont" formed, the present Central Vermont Railway, still under Smith's management. He was one of the originators of the Northern Pacific railroad enterprise and was the president of the corporation from 1866 to 1872, when he retired amid the troubles that were thickening about both companies. Under his lead 555 miles of the road were built. He married in 1842 Ann Eliza, daughter of the Hon. Lawrence Brainerd.

DILLINGHAM, PAUL. Governor 1865-7. Born Shutesbury, Mass., Aug. 10, 1799; son of Paul and Hannah (Smith) Dillingham; died Waterbury, July 26, 1891. Came to Vermont with his family when six years old; was educated in the Washington County grammar school; studied law at Middlebury in the office of Dan Carpenter; was admitted to the Bar in March, 1823; and formed a partnership with his preceptor, which lasted until the latter's elevation to the bench. For fifty-two years, until his retirement in 1875, he was in the constant practice of his profession, except for the interruptions by his public service, and as a jury advocate he was at the head of a Bar that for a full generation was among the ablest the state ever contained, and ranked perhaps as the first in the state. He was town clerk of Waterbury from 1829 to 1844; representative to the Legislature in 1833, 1834, 1837, 1838, and 1839; states attorney for Washington County in 1835, 1836, and 1837; a member of the constitutional conventions of 1836, 1857, and 1870; state senator Washington County in 1841, 1842, and 1861; and in 1843 was elected member of Congress, where he served two terms, and was on the committee on the judiciary. He was one of the leaders of the state Democracy, in what may be called its golden era intellectually, though it was a hopeless minority; and when a state convention met with Saxe, Eastman, Dillingham, Smalley, Kellogg, Stoughton, Thomas, Field, Chittenden, Poland, Redfield, Davenport and others, to flash their wit and eloquence across it, and with Hawthorne frequently coming up from Massachusetts to partake of the communion, there was apt to be a "feast of reason and flow of soul," such as no other political organization in the state before or since has witnessed. While in Congress Mr. Dillingham was the only Democrat on the delegation. He strongly favored the admission of Texas, and the policy that led to the Mexican war. But the firing on Sumter shattered in a moment the political affiliations of a life-time. He wanted party lines obliterated entirely and the whole North to stand solid in support of the national administration; received a warm welcome into the Republican ranks; was a leader in the state Senate in the war measures of 1861, and the next year his services were recognized with the nomination for lieutenant-governor, and after three years' service in this position with that for governor in the years 1865 and 1866. The candidate against him both years was his old political friend, Charles N. Davenport. Governor Dillingham's majority in 1865 was 16,714 and in 1866 22,822. The great monument of his administration is the establishment of the reform school, which he recommended in his first message. In 1872 he was the first lay delegate ever elected by the Vermont Conference of the M. E. Church to the General Conference. His first wife was Sarah P. Carpenter, daughter of his law partner, Dan Carpenter; she died in 1831; and in 1832 he married her younger sister, Julia.

PAGE, JOHN B. Governor 1867-69. Born Rutland, Feb. 25, 1826; son of William and Cynthia (Hickok) Page; died Oct. 24, 1885. Educated in the public schools, and at Burr and Burton Academy, Manchester. Entered the old bank at Rutland at the age of 16; was many years president of the National Bank of Rutland, the reorganized form of the old state bank; became interested in the Rutland & Burlington R. R., by being appointed one of the trustees of the second mortgage bond-holders, and upon the reorganization of the property as the Rutland Railroad Co., was made president; was for a time trustee of the Bennington & Rutland R. R.; later was associated with Gov. J. Gregory Smith as vice-president of the Central Vermont; was a director of the Champlain Transportation Co., and various other railroad enterprises, and also in the Caughnawaga Ship Canal project for connecting Lake Champlain and the St. Lawrence, etc.; was instrumental in the transfer of the shops of the Howe Scale Co. from Brandon to Rutland, and was treasurer of the company. He was in 1852 elected a representative to the General Assembly of Vermont, and re-elected for the sessions of 1853 and 1854; in 1860 elected state treasurer, and received successive re-elections annually till 1866, and was during this time allotment commissioner by appointment of President Lincoln; originated the plan for the payment of the extra state pay voted by Vermont to her soldiers, $7 per month, and disbursed during his term as treasurer a total of $4,635,150.80 for military expenses; in 1867 elected governor, and re-elected in 1868, serving with judgment and ability through the critical period after the war; was again elected representative from Rutland in 1880. He was a member of the Congregational Church, for many years a deacon and superintendent of the Sunday school, a corporate member of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, and was instrumental in having the meeting of that society, the only one ever convened in the state, held at Rutland in 1874.

WASHBURN, PETER T. Governor 1869 until his death, Feb. 7, 1870. Born Lynn, Mass., Sept. 7, 1814; son of Reuben and Hannah B. (Thacher) Washburn. In 1817 his father moved to Vermont, first settling at Chester, then at Cavendish, and finally at Ludlow. Peter graduated at Dartmouth in 1835; studied law first under the direction of his father, then for a time in the office of Senator Upham at Montpelier; was admitted to the Bar in 1838; and began practice at Ludlow, moving in 1844 to Woodstock, where he formed a partnership with Charles P. Marsh which continued until the death of the latter in 1870. Was in 1844 elected reporter of the decisions of the supreme court of Vermont, holding the position for eight years; represented Woodstock in the Legislatures of 1853 and 1854; chairman of the Vermont delegation to the Republican national convention that in 1860 nominated Lincoln and Hamlin; was in command of the Woodstock Light Infantry, a company of citizen soldiers who at once proffered their services to their country, and on the 1st of May marched to Rutland, where it was incorporated with the First Vermont Regiment; was commissioned lieutenant-colonel, but acted as colonel during its entire period of service; in October, 1861, was elected adjutant and inspector-general of Vermont, and until the war closed devoted himself to its arduous duties, bringing order and system out of chaos and making it the model adjutant's office of the country; was in 1869 elected governor by a majority of 22,822 over Homer W. Heaton, the Democratic candidate, and died in office Feb. 7, 1870. He had simply worn himself into the grave by overwork in the excess of his faithfulness to duty. No trace of disease, organic or functional, could be found by the physicians after his death. His first wife was Almira E. Ferris of Swanton; his second, Almira P. Hopkins of Glens Falls, N. Y.

HENDEE, GEORGE WHITMAN. Governor from Feb. 7, 1870, till the close of the term. Born Stowe, Nov. 30, 1832; son of Jehial P. and Rebecca (Ferrin) Hendee; died Morrisville, Dec. 6, 1906. Educated in the public schools, and at People's Academy, Morrisville; studied law in the office of W. G. Ferrin of Johnson; admitted to the Lamoille County Bar 1855. In 1855 married Millissa Redding, who died 1861; in 1863 married Viola S. Bundy. Engaged in the practice of law at Morrisville; was for many years a director of the Portland & Ogdensburg R. R.; at one time president of the Montreal, Portland & Boston R. R. of Canada; was a director and vice-president of the Union Savings Bank and Trust Co. of Morrisville; was receiver of the National Bank of Poultney, and of the Vermont National Bank of St. Albans; and was national bank examiner from 1879 to 1885. Governor Hendee was always a Republican. When he was twenty-one years old, was elected superintendent of schools, a position he repeatedly filled; there was hardly a year in which he was not called by the public to discharge some official trust; many times acted by order of court as auditor, trustee, and special master; was a member of the Vermont House of Representatives for Morristown two sessions, 1861-62; states attorney for Lamoille County in 1858-59; deputy provost marshal during the war; senator for Lamoille County 1866, 1867, and 1868, and lieutenant-governor in 1869. Sworn in as governor by Judge Steele on the death of Gov. P. T. Washburn, he served the remainder of the term; he was a member of the Forty-third, Forty-fourth, and Forty-fifth Congresses, and there served on the committee on private land claims, and on the District of Columbia; was largely instrumental in drafting and securing the passage of the law which made an entire change of the form of government of the District.

STEWART, JOHN WOLCOTT, Middlebury. Governor 1870-2. Born Middlebury, Nov. 24, 1825; son of Ira and Elizabeth (Hubbell) Stewart. Educated at Middlebury Academy, and Middlebury College, graduating in the class of 1864. In 1860 married Emma, daughter of Philip Battell, and granddaughter of Hon. Horatio Seymour. They had five children, of whom three survive, Elga, Phillip B. of Colorado (nominated for governor, but declined the office), and Jessica (Mrs. J. W. Sylvester). Read law in office of Hon. Horatio Seymour in Middlebury until January, 1850, when he was admitted to Vermont Bar; began practice at Middlebury and conducted it alone until 1854, when he formed a partnership with ex-U. S. Senator Phelps, continuing until the death of the latter in 1855; director Middlebury Bank 1858, and for several years prior to 1881 was its president. A Republican; states attorney for Addison County 1852-3-4; represented Middlebury in the Legislature 1856, '57, '64, '65, '66, '67, serving as speaker the last three terms, and as chairman of committee on railroads in 1856; senator from Addison County 1861 and 1862, serving as chairman of judiciary committee; governor of Vermont 1870-2, the first to be elected for a two-year term; returned as member of the house in 1876; representative to Congress from the 1st congressional district 1882, '84, '86 and '88, and on the death of U. S. Senator Redfield Proctor was appointed by Governor Fletcher D. Proctor to fill out the unexpired term. He received this appointment while at Colorado Springs, and left immediately for Washington. In the fall of 1876, Governor Stewart was in New York until the day before the Legislature convened, arriving in Montpelier after the flag had been raised on the state house; the roll of the house was being called; Governor Stewart found his way to a vacant seat which had been reserved by a friend; in ten minutes after his arrival he had been chosen speaker of the house on the first ballot, his Republican opponent having only a few votes. As state senator, Governor Stewart and Senator George F. Edmunds were elected a committee to revise the statutes. In religious preference a Congregationalist.

CONVERSE, JULIUS. Governor 1872-4. Born Stafford, Conn., Dec. 17, 1798; son of Joseph and Mary (Johnson) Converse; died Dixville Notch, N. H., Aug. 16, 1885. Came to Vermont 1801; educated in common schools and Randolph Academy; studied law in the office of William Nutting at Randolph; admitted to the Orange County Bar 1826. In 1827 married Melissa Arnold, who died 1872; in 1873 married Jane E. Martin. Settled first at Bethel, whence he removed in 1840 to Woodstock; at Bethel he was for several years in partnership with A. P. Hunton, afterward speaker of the lower House of the Legislature in 1860-62; at Woodstock he formed a partnership with Andrew Tracy, and later with James Barrett, the firms being Tracy & Converse, Tracy, Converse & Barrett, and after Mr. Tracy's election to Congress, Tracy & Barrett; after Mr. Barrett's elevation to the supreme court, Mr. Converse formed a partnership with W. C. French which continued until 1865; after that practiced alone; he several times represented Bethel in the Legislature; was a member from Windsor County of the first Senate in 1836, and three times re-elected to that body; also represented Woodstock several times; was states attorney for Windsor County from 1844 to 1847; in 1850 and 1851 he was elected lieutenant-governor on the ticket with Gov. Charles K. Williams; for the next twenty years he was out of public life until in 1872, when nearly 74 years old, he was suddenly and unexpectedly nominated for governor, being taken up to defeat Frederick Billings, a purpose that was accomplished by a narrow majority of one after a hard fight in the Republican state convention. Mr. Converse was traveling outside of the state at the time, and the first he knew of his candidacy was when he read about the nomination in the morning papers. He was elected by a majority of 25,319 over A. B. Gardner, ex-lieutenant-governor, who had joined the Liberal Republican movement of that year, and whom the Greeleyites and Democrats had nominated in high hopes of cutting the Republican majority down to 10,000. His administration was without notable incident.

PECK, ASAHEL. Governor 1874-6. Born Royalston, Mass., September, 1803; son of Squire and Elizabeth (Goddard) Peck; died May 18, 1879. Came to Vermont with his father when three years old; educated in the common schools and Washington County Grammar School; entered the sophomore class of University of Vermont 1824; left college in his senior year to study French at a French college in Canada. He studied law in the office of his oldest brother, Nathan Peck, at Hinesburgh, and afterward for a year or two in the office of Bailey & Marsh at Burlington; was admitted to the Bar in March, 1832; practiced alone for a while and afterward in partnership with Archibald Hyde, and later with D. A. Smalley; was judge of the circuit court from 1851 till it ceased in 1857; in 1860 was elected judge of the supreme court under the present system, and held the position continuously, though desiring toward the end to retire, until his election as governor in 1874. He was nominated then in response to a strong demand from the people and against the calculations of the old line of managing politicians; did not, however, make such radical recommendations on the questions of the day as some of his supporters had expected. On his retirement from the gubernatorial chair Judge Peck retired to his farm in Jericho, where he died. He was never married.

FAIRBANKS, HORACE. Governor 1876-8. Born Barnet, March 21, 1820; son of Gov. Erastus and Lois (Crossman) Fairbanks; died New York, March 17, 1888. Educated in the common schools and at the academies in Peacham and Lyndon, Meriden, N. H., and Andover, Mass. At the age of eighteen he took a clerkship in the firm of E. and T. Fairbanks and Co.; became active partner in 1843, and finally the financial manager of its extensive business, whose annual product he saw grow from $50,000 to $3,000,000, and force of workmen from 40 to 600; was from the beginning identified with the construction of the Portland & Ogdensburg R. R., the piloter of the charter through the New Hampshire Legislature, and the backer of the enterprise with the utmost of his means and credit. Built and presented to St. Johnsbury the public library and art gallery known as the St. Johnsbury Athenæum, dedicated in 1871. Delegate to the Republican national conventions 1864 and 1872; presidential elector 1868; state senator from Caledonia County 1869; nominated for governor after a bitter pre-convention fight in the Republican party over the candidacy of Deacon Jacob Estey of Brattleboro on the third ballot, though he had declined to be considered a candidate and was out of his state at the time; was elected by a vote of 44,723 to 20,988 for W. H. H. Bingham, the Democratic candidate. He was married in 1849 to Mary E. Taylor of Derry, N. H.

PROCTOR, REDFIELD. Governor 1878-80. Born Proctorsville, June 1, 1831; son of Jabez and Betsy (Parker) Proctor; died Washington, D. C., March 4, 1908. Graduated from Dartmouth College 1851, degree of A. M. 1854, and from the Albany, N. Y., Law School. In 1858 married Emily J. Dutton of Cavendish. Admitted to the New York Bar at Albany, and to the Vermont Bar at Woodstock; during a portion of the years 1860 and 1861 practiced his profession in the office of his cousin, Judge Isaac F. Redfield, at Boston, Mass. Upon the outbreak of the Rebellion in 1861 he immediately returned to Vermont and enlisted in the 3rd Vermont Regiment; commissioned lieutenant and quartermaster, and repaired to the front; in July of the same year was appointed on the staff of Gen. William F. ("Baldy") Smith, and in October was promoted and transferred to the 5th Vermont Volunteers, of which he was commissioned major; with this regiment he served nearly a year in the neighborhood of Washington and on the Peninsula; in October, 1862, was promoted to the colonelcy of the 15th Vermont Volunteers, and in the memorable and decisive engagement at Gettysburg was stationed on the famous Cemetery Ridge during a part of the second day's struggle. After the war formed law partnership in Rutland with Col. W. G. Veazey; in 1869 he became manager for the Sutherland Falls Marble Co. In 1880 the Sutherland Falls and Rutland Marble companies were consolidated under the name of The Vermont Marble Co., with Governor Proctor as its president. Under his management this company enlarged and so increased its business as to become the largest concern of the kind in the world. A Republican; selectman in Rutland 1866; represented Rutland in the Legislature 1867, and was chairman of the committee on elections; again a member of the House 1868, and member of the committee on ways and means; state senator from Rutland County 1874, and was chosen president pro tem.; lieutenant-governor 1876-8; governor of the state 1878-80; delegate to the Republican national conventions 1884, 1888, and 1896; appointed secretary of war in the cabinet of President Benjamin Harrison March 4, 1889, and served until Dec. 7, 1891, having been appointed U. S. senator by Gov. Carroll S. Page to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Senator George F. Edmunds; elected U. S. senator to succeed himself by the Legislature 1892, 1898, and 1904, and served until his death; in February, 1898, visited Cuba at his own expense and on his own responsibility to investigate the conditions there under the insurrection against Spanish rule; March 17, made a speech in the Senate which was accepted as a true and authoritative statement of the conditions on the island. Senator Hoar said in an address, "The resolutions of Congress demanding the evacuation of Cuba by Spain, which brought on the war, were the result not of the destruction of the Maine, but of Senator Proctor's report that a half million people were being starved to death at our very doors."

FARNHAM, ROSWELL. Governor 1880-2. Born Boston, Mass., July 23, 1827; son of Roswell and Nancy (Bixby) Farnham; died Bradford, Jan. 5, 1903. Came to Vermont with his father 1840, settling at Bradford. Educated at the academy at Bradford; entered the junior class University of Vermont; graduate 1849, degree of A. M. 1852. In 1849 married Mary Elizabeth Johnson of Bradford. Ormsby; began practicing independently 1859; elected states attorney 1859, and twice re-elected. Second lieutenant Bradford Guards in the 1st Regiment Vermont Volunteers; captain and lieutenant-colonel 12th Regiment Vermont Volunteers, and for nearly half the term of his service in command of the regiment. After the war resumed practice of law at Bradford; Republican candidate for representative in the Legislature, but was defeated; state senator from Orange County 1868 and 1869; delegate to the Republican national convention and presidential elector 1876; elected governor of the state in 1880 by a majority of over 25,000.

BARSTOW, JOHN LESTER, Shelburne. Governor 1882-4. Born Shelburne, Feb. 21, 1832; son of Heman and Loraine (Lyon) Barstow. Educated in the public schools; began to teach in the district schools at the age of 15; received degree of LL. D. from Norwich University 1909. In 1858 married Laura Maeck, granddaughter of Dr. Frederick Maeck, the first physician to settle in Shelburne; she died in 1885; they had two sons, Frederick M. (University of Vermont 1880), a civil engineer who died in government service during the Spanish war from typhoid fever, and Charles L., a graduate of Union College, now living in New York. Went west at an early age; engaged in business in Detroit, Mich.; returned to Shelburne

1857 and assumed charge of his father's farm. In the fall of 1861, while assistant clerk of the House of Representatives at Montpelier, was appointed on the noncommissioned staff of the 8th Vermont Volunteers, later being promoted to the ranks of adjutant, captain, and major; participated in all the engagements in which his regiment took part; was complimented for eminent service in the field, for gallantry in the assault on Port Hudson, and honorably mentioned for his personal services; served as acting adjutant-general under Generals Thomas and Weitzel; was discharged at the expiration of his term of service June 22, 1864. When promoted major, his old company gave him a beautiful sword; and when he left the service, the men who were mustered out with him presented him with another still more beautiful. The historian of his regiment says (Irwin's History of the 19th Army Corps, p. 505): "When, after the bloody fight of June 14, 1863, in front of Port Hudson, General Banks called for volunteers to head a strong column for a final attack, Captain Barstow was one of the brave men who stepped forward to form the forlorn hope." He had entered the army with robust health and a vigorous constitution, but nearly three years in the swamps and miasmatic climate of Louisiana had shattered both, and for many years malarial diseases prevented active business pursuits. On his return to Vermont, he declined a responsible position in the recruiting service offered him by Adjutant-General Peter T. Washburn. In the fall of 1864, while serving his first term in the Vermont Legislature, the St. Albans raid occurred; in consequence of that raid, and at General Washburn's request, Major Barstow was sent on a special mission to Canada; was subsequently appointed brigadier-general to command one of the three brigades into which the home militia companies of the state were divided; remained in command of the northwestern frontier of the state until relieved by General Stannard in June, 1865. Since 1886 he has been a trustee of the Burlington Savings Bank, during which time the deposits have risen from two to more than thirteen million dollars; was for some years a trustee of the University of Vermont and State Agricultural College. He is a Republican; has held various elective town offices; represented

Shelburne in the Legislature 1864 and 1865; was senator from Chittenden County 1866 and 1867; U. S. pension agent at Burlington by appointment of President Grant 1870-8, discharging his duties with such efficiency and fidelity as to call forth a letter of cordial appreciation from the Hon. Carl Schurz, secretary of the interior; was commissioner from Vermont at the centennial celebration of Cornwallis's surrender at Yorktown by appointment from Gov. Redfield Proctor 1881; lieutenant governor of the state 1880-2; governor 1882-4. He was the first governor of Vermont to call attention to the excessive and discriminating rates charged for freight by the transportation companies of the state, and to urge the creation of an efficient railroad commission. It was on his recommendation that the Legislature of 1884 requested the Vermont delegation in Congress to use their best efforts to secure the passage of the interstate commerce law. He urged the passage of a state law providing for equal taxation as between railroad and other property such as has since become law in Michigan, New Hampshire, and other states. He also urged the abolition of the free pass system; was among the early advocates of laws permitting central and high schools to be maintained by public taxation; and upon his recommendation the present plan was adopted of extending state aid to deserving young men to enable them to obtain a college education. The Ely riots occurred while he was governor, and his course in requiring that justice should precede force, and that the rioting miners should be paid their honest dues, attracted much favorable comment throughout the country. He was one of the commissioners to purchase a site for the Bennington battle monument; in 1891 was appointed by President Harrison to act as a commissioner with Gen. A. McD. McCook, U. S. A., to treat with the Navajo Indians, the work being brought to a successful conclusion; was disbursing officer of the commission, and astonished treasury officials by returning to the treasury nearly one-half of the appropriation for expenses; in 1893, at the request of Governor Fuller, he acted with the executive committee of the National Anti-Trust Society. Before the Legislature of 1910 he strongly advocated the ratification of the constitutional amendment authorizing Congress to impose an income tax; and in 1911 he has used his influence in opposition to reciprocity with Canada, on the ground that it would mean the free entry of Canadian farm products into this country to the injury of the American farmer, while high protective duties would still remain upon everything, except farm products, which the American farmer needed to buy. In religious belief Governor Barstow is an Episcopalian. He has been a Mason since 1853, when he was initiated into Union Lodge of Strict Observance, of Detroit, Mich., of which he is now an honorary member; is past commander of the Loyal Legion; ex-president of the Officers' Reunion Society; member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and of many state and national civic bodies.

PINGREE, SAMUEL E., Hartford. Governor 1884-6. Born Salisbury, N. H., Aug. 2, 1832; son of Stephen and Judith Pingree. Educated in the public schools; Andover (N. H.) and McIndoes Falls academies, and Dartmouth College, A. B. 1857; Norwich University, LL. D. 1898. In 1869 married Lydia M. Steele of Stanstead, P. Q.; they have one son, William Steele Pingree. Was member of Vermont National Guard, enlisting in Co. A in 1884, being promoted to 2nd and 1st lieutenant; resigned in 1886, and was appointed inspector of rifle practice on the staff of Colonel Greenleaf; in 1883 was elected the first permanent colonel of the Vermont division of Sons of Veterans. Served several terms as selectman, both in Rutland and Proctor; secretary of civil and military affairs under Governor Ormsbee; represented Proctor in the Legislature 1890, 1900, and 1904; speaker in 1900; senator from Rutland County 1892; governor of Vermont 1906-8; delegate-at-large to the Republican national convention 1908. Member of Union Church.

PROUTY, GEORGE HERBERT, Newport. Governor 1908-10. Born Newport, March 4, 1862; son of John A. and Hannah B. (Lamb) Prouty. Educated at Newport public schools, St. Johnsbury Academy, and Bryant and Stratton's Business College. In 1890 married Henrietta Allen of Rockville, Conn. At the age of 18 entered the employ of his father, who, with O. C. Miller, was engaged in the lumber business; the concern is today one of the largest companies in northern New England, owning large plants in Canada and Maine, besides the mills at Newport. Since his entrance into the firm the annual output has increased many fold, due to Mr. Prouty's advanced business methods. Is a Republican; represented Newport in the Legislature 1896; senator from Orleans County 1904, and president pro tem of the Senate; lieutenant-governor 1906-8; governor 1908-10, and represented Vermont at the tercentennial celebration of the discovery of Lake Champlain 1909. An attendant of the Congregational Church.

MEAD, JOHN ABNER, Rutland, Governor 1910-1912. Born Fair Haven, April 20, 1841, only child of Roswell Rowley Mead and Lydia Ann (Gorham) Mead. His father was a successful merchant in West Rutland till his death in 1875. His great-great-grandfather, Col. James Mead, was the first settler in Rutland and father of the first white child born in the valley of the Otter Creek. He was the first moderator, and first selectman of the town and first representative from Rutland to the first Vermont Legislature. Colonel Mead was among the most active patriots of his day. He was a member of the Dorset Convention of September 25, 1776, and of the committee appointed by the Windsor Convention in June, 1777, to arrange with the commander of Fort Ticonderoga for the frontier defence. He was colonel of the 3rd Regiment of Vermont Militia, and the Vermont pay rolls contain the record of a payment to Colonel Mead's militia for their tours to Ticonderoga in 1777. The state's records for the same year show that Colonel Mead's regiment rendered efficient service in scouting after Tories at sundry times, and also in guarding such as were taken, supposed to be enemies. In 1779 Colonel Mead was engaged in still guarding the frontier, showing that not only upon the field of battle, but also dealing with a wily foe in ambush, he was a living illustration of the watchword of his ancestors "Semper Paratus." Governor Mead on the maternal side was descended from John Howland who came over in the Mayflower. He was known as the "Beloved Pilgrim" of Plymouth and the last survivor of that memorable body of men who endured hardships of great severity, borne with heroic fortitude. The daughter of John Howland married Captain John Gorham who was killed in one of the Indian wars with King Phillip. The Gorhams belonged to the nobility as their genealogical tree and pictures of their baronial castle in France bear evidence. Governor Mead is able to trace the line away back to the time when William the Conqueror made his excursion to France in 1051, down to his mother Lydia, daughter of Eli Gorham of Rutland. John A. Mead was educated at the common school at West Rutland, Franklin Academy at Malone, N. Y., and at Middlebury College where he was graduated in 1864. In 1868 he received his diploma from the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York City, in reality the medical department of Columbia University. He was appointed house physician in the Kings County Hospital at Flatbush, L. I., a position he held for several years. He then removed to Rutland, where he practiced medicine until 1888. At this time he was tendered a chair in the medical department of the University of Vermont. During the time when by hard work and rigid economy he was able to complete his studies at college, occurred the struggle for the preservation of the Union. Mr. Mead stood high in his class, but patriotically responsive to the great war president he and several of his classmates enlisted in Co. K., 12th Vermont Volunteers, serving for a period of nine months, participating in several skirmishes, important battles and the 30-mile night march after the battle of Gettysburg. Upon being mustered out he returned to Middlebury, graduating with the class. He is now one of the trustees of Middlebury College, Norwich University and University of Vermont and these three colleges conferred the title of LL. D. upon him in 1911. In 1885 he relinquished the practice of medicine to devote his entire attention to his increasing business interests. He had received, meanwhile, recognition of professional abilities in the appointment of medical director of the Vermont State encampment. He served as surgeon-general of the State G. A. R. 1890, with rank of brigadier-general on the staff of Gov. Redfield Proctor, as member of the board of pension examiners and as medical superintendent of the house of correction. In 1881 he aided in the organization of the Vermont Association, was chosen its medical examiner and director, and in the same year assisted in organizing the State Trust Co. and was elected its vice-president, later becoming its president. In 1888 he reorganized the Howe Scale Co. of which he became president, and the phenomenal growth of that enterprise is largely due to his energetic and wise management. He has been connected with several other large corporations; in the old National Bank of Rutland, as director and cashier, in the Rutland Railroad as treasurer and director, the Clement National Bank as director, the Baxter National Bank as president, and the John A. Mead Manufacturing Co. as president. Is a Republican; Senator from Rutland County 1892; commissioner to World's Columbian Exposition, Chicago, 1893, by appointment of Governor Fuller; commissioner to Mexican National Exposition of Industries and Free Arts 1895, by appointment of Governor Woodbury; represented Rutland City in the Legislature 1906; lieutenant-governor 1908, and governor of Vermont 1910; delegate-at-large to national Republican convention, Chicago, 1912. Member First Congregational Church, Rutland, serving many years as chairman of its executive committee, and vice-president of Congregational Club of Western Vermont. Member Grand Army of the Republic, and was a staff officer for Generals Alger, Veazey and Gilman during the term of each as commander-in-chief of the order; charter member Rutland Valley Grange; member of Vermont Society Sons of American Revolution; Rutland Lodge No. 79, F. & A. M., and a Noble of the Mystic Shrine. In 1872 Governor Mead married Mary M., daughter of Hon. William N. and Mary M. B. Sherman of Greenwich, R. I. They have one daughter, Mary Sherman, the wife of Carl B. Hinsman, vice-president of the Howe Scale Co.; and one grandson who bears the name of John Abner Mead Hinsman.

BRADLEY, STEPHEN R., and Moses Robinson were the first senators after the admission of the state into the Union. Mr. Bradley was five times elected the president pro tem. of the Senate, the third highest office in the government, and was regarded as the most potent Democrat in New England. He was born at Wallingford, (now Cheshire) Conn., Feb. 20, 1754; son of Moses and Mary (Row) Bradley, and grandson of Stephen Bradley, one of a family of six brothers who came to this country in 1637, after service in Cromwell's Ironsides. He graduated from Yale in 1775, entered the Revolutionary service as captain of company of volunteers as early as February, 1776, later serving as quartermaster and aid on the staff of General Wooster. In 1779 he appeared in Vermont and was licensed to practice law, having studied law under Thomas Reeve, founder of the Litchfield Law School. In June, 1780, was appointed states attorney for Cumberland County and still earlier had prepared a statement of Vermont's case against the claims of New York, New Hampshire and Massachusetts, entitled "Vermont's Appeal to a Candid and Impartial World." He and Jonas Fay and Moses Robinson were appointed agents to Congress to urge the recognition of the independence of the state. The fruitlessness of this mission has been explained in previous sketches, but the ability and resourcefulness of the young Vermonter added greatly to his reputation. He represented Westminster in the Legislature in 1780, '81, '84, '85, '88, '90, and in 1785 was speaker of the House, of which he had been clerk in 1779; was states attorney several years and general prosecuting officer of the state; was register of probate 1781-91, when he entered the U. S. Senate. In 1783 was judge of county court, and from October, 1788, to October, 1789, was judge of the supreme court. He was a lieutenant and then a colonel in the first regiment Vermont militia, serving on the staff of Gen. Ethan Allen, and in 1791 was made a brigadier-general. By lot it fell to him, when elected 1791, to be a senator of the second class whose term expired in four years, and then as the Federalists were a majority he was defeated for re-election in 1794, but six years later, he was again elected and re-elected in 1806, serving with distinction. Was president of the convention of Republican members of Congress, and on Jan. 19, 1808, summoned the convention of members which met and nominated Mr. Madison as President. He was the author of the constitutional amendment requiring the Vice-President, like the President, to be elected by a majority of the electoral votes, and which he reported from the committee. He retired from public life in 1813 and five years later removed from Westminster to Walpole, N. H., where, after a happy and contented evening of life, he went to rest Dec. 9, 1830.

PAINE, ELIJAH; senator at the close of the 18th century, state judge, U. S. judge, pioneer manufacturer and scientific farmer; was born at Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 2, 1757; son of Seth Paine. He studied at Harvard a few months, entered the Revolutionary army, and graduated 1781; after studying law he came to Vermont in 1784, locating at Windsor, later pushing into the wilderness to Williamstown and soon established a mill for the manufacture of broadcloths, finally employing nearly 200 workmen; erected the first saw and grist mill in that section, and constructed at a cost of $10,000 a turnpike from Brookfield to Montpelier, which he presented to the state. At one time he owned 15,000 Merino sheep, with many high grade horses, cattle and swine. In 1786 was a member of the convention to revise the state constitution; represented Williamstown in the Legislature 1787-91; judge of the superior court until 1794, when he was elected U. S. senator to succeed Stephen R. Bradley, declining a second election because he was appointed U. S. district judge for Vermont, which position he held for over forty years, until a few weeks of his death, April 28, 1842. In 1790 he married Sarah Porter of Plymouth, N. H.; they had four sons, Martin, an eminent physician; Elijah, a judge of the supreme court of New York; George, a prominent lawyer; and Gov. Charles Paine.

CHIPMAN, NATHANIEL; born Salisbury, Conn., Nov. 15, 1752; son of Samuel and Hannah Chipman; graduated from Yale in 1777, served as lieutenant and fought at Monmouth and Valley Forge, but resigned because of poverty and completed his study of law; admitted to bar 1779; came to Vermont and settled at Tinmouth where he built a forge for the manufacture of bar iron and conducted a farm. Represented Tinmouth in the Legislature 1784-85; elected assistant judge of the superior court 1786, the first lawyer to be placed on the bench in Vermont; chief justice 1789-90; and a member of the commission which determined the boundary between New York and Vermont. Jan. 18, 1791, he was appointed with Lewis R. Morris commissioner to attend Congress and negotiate for the admission of the state into the Union. Immediately after admission, President Washington made him U. S. judge for the district of Vermont, a position he resigned in 1793. In 1796 he was again elected chief justice, and in 1797 elected senator to succeed Tichenor serving five years, when he returned to Vermont and resumed the practice of law, again representing Tinmouth in the Legislature 1806-11. In March, 1813, elected one of the council of censors, a body chosen once every seven years to review the constitution and recommend amendments. He was chosen chief justice of the state in 1813, but displaced in 1815 when the Democrats, or Republicans as they then generally called themselves, returned to power. In 1815 he was appointed professor of law at Middlebury College, holding the chair until 1843. He died Feb. 13, 1843, aged ninety-one years.

ROBINSON, JONATHAN; youngest son of Samuel, Sr.; chief justice of the supreme court and United States senator; born Hardwick, Aug. 11, 1756, came to Bennington with his father in 1761, and was admitted to the bar in 1796; was town clerk for six years beginning with 1795, town representative thirteen times before 1802, and chief justice of the supreme court from 1801 to 1807. In the latter year the triumph of the Jeffersonians in at last defeating Tichenor and electing Israel Smith governor, seven years after they had got control of the rest of the government, necessitated the latter's resignation of his seat in the Senate, and Judge Robinson was chosen to succeed him, and in 1809 he was also elected for another term closing in 1815. After his retirement from the Senate he was elected judge of probate in October, 1815, and held the position for four years, and again represented the town in 1818. He died Nov. 3, 1819, at the age of sixty-three. He married Mary, daughter of John Fassett. One of their sons, Jonathan E., a lawyer, was town clerk nine years and judge of county court in 1828, and died in 1831. Another, Henry, was paymaster in the army, clerk in the pension office, brigadier-general of militia, and for ten years clerk of the county and supreme court. He died in 1856.

CHASE, DUDLEY; twice U. S. senator, speaker of the assembly five years, and four years chief justice of the supreme court; brother of Bishop Philander Chase of Ohio, and the uncle of Salmon P. Chase, the Republican statesman and chief justice; born Corinth, N. H., Dec. 30, 1771; son of Deacon Dudley Chase; graduated at Dartmouth 1791; studied law with Hon. Lot Hall at Westminster, and settled at Randolph; states attorney for Orange County 1803-11; member constitutional conventions of 1814 and 1822; represented Randolph in the Legislature 1805-12; being speaker the last five years, and immediately elected U. S. senator to succeed Stephen R. Bradley; resigned at the expiration of his first term of six years to accept a position as chief justice of the supreme court of the state, being re-elected to this post each year until 1821 when he retired to resume the practice of law; sent again to the Legislature in 1823-24, and again elected U. S. senator, retiring finally to private life in 1831. He died Feb. 23, 1846, following an accident which resulted in paralysis of his right leg, his wife who was Olivia Brown and whom he married when she was seventeen, surviving him only a few days.

FISK, JAMES; born Greenwich, Mass., Oct. 4, 1763; came to Vermont when a mere child, enlisted at age of sixteen in the Revolutionary Army and served three years, returned to Greenwich and at age of twenty-two was a representative to the Massachusetts General Assembly; began to preach as a Universalist preacher and came to Barre in 1798, preached occasionally, cleared a farm, studied law, opened an office and rose to eminence and position; represented the town nine years from 1800 to 1815, being active in legislation for the observance of the Sabbath, the taxing of liquor selling and the regulation of marriage and divorce; was judge of Orange county court 1802-9, and in 1816 one of the three judges of the supreme court of the state, resigning two years later to accept election to the U. S. senate. Was a representative in Congress in 1804, serving two terms, and again from 1811 to 1815, and then after his two years' service was chosen U. S. senator in 1817 to succeed Dudley Chase, but resigned after two years' service to accept the post of collector of customs for the district of Vermont, which he held for eight years, and during that time moved to Swanton where he died Dec. 1, 1844. He was succeeded in the U. S. senate by William A. Palmer.

SEYMOUR, HORATIO; born Litchfield, Conn., May 31, 1778; son of Maj. Moses and Mary (Marsh) Seymour; fitted for college and graduated from Yale in 1797; taught an academy for a year at Cheshire, Conn.; attended Judge Reeve's law school at Litchfield for a year, and in October, 1799, came to Middlebury to continue the study of law under Daniel Chipman, and in 1800 was admitted to the bar. Was postmaster at Middlebury nine years; states attorney 1810-13 and 1815-19, and councillor 1809 to 1814. In 1820 he was elected U. S. senator, and re-elected in 1826 after a vigorous contest with Governor Van Ness; was the Whig candidate for governor in 1833 and 1834. He was judge of probate 1847-56. Middlebury conferred the degree of LL. D. on him in 1847. In 1800 he married Lucy, daughter of Jonah Case of Addison; she died in 1838, leaving three sons and one daughter. He died Nov. 21, 1857.

PRENTISS, SAMUEL, one of the great Whig leaders of his day; was born at Stonington, Conn., March 31, 1782; son of Dr. Samuel Prentiss. His boyhood was passed at Northfield, Mass.; he had only a common school education, studied law at Northfield, Mass., and at Brattleboro, admitted to Windham County bar 1802, locating at Montpelier. In 1822 he declined election as associate judge of the supreme court; represented Montpelier in the Legislature 1824-25, and during the latter session was chosen to the supreme court, becoming chief justice four years later; one year later brought a summons to go to Washington to succeed Dudley Chase, being re-elected in 1836, but resigned before its expiration to accept appointment as judge of the U. S. district court for the district of Vermont to succeed Elijah Paine, deceased. He continued in this position fourteen years until his death, Jan. 15, 1857. In 1804 he married Lucretia, daughter of Edward Houghton of Northfield, who died at Montpelier, June 15, 1855. She had twelve children, of whom ten were boys, and all of them who lived to reach manhood became lawyers.

SWIFT, BENJAMIN; representative in Congress 1827-31, and senator from 1833-9; born at Amenia, N. Y., April 8, 1780; son of Rev. Job Swift, lawyer, editor, historian of Addison County, a judge of probate and assistant judge there, and secretary of the governor and council 1813-14. Young Swift studied law at Litchfield, Conn.; began practice at Bennington, but moved to St. Albans in 1809. He was repeatedly a candidate for office on local and county tickets and was two or three times representative from St. Albans. As a Whig he was elected representative to Congress 1827; re-elected in 1829, but withdrew in favor of Heman Allen of Milton who succeeded him. The next year he was brought forward as a candidate to U. S. Senate, elected and served the full term until 1839. After his retirement from the senate followed farming and was at work in the field when death overtook him.

PHELPS, SAMUEL S., senator for 13 years; born Litchfield, Conn., May, 1793; entered Yale at age of 14 graduating in 1811; studied law until 1812, came to Middlebury and entered the office of Horatio Seymour; served in the war of 1812 in the ranks at Burlington and Plattsburg and afterwards as paymaster; admitted to Addison County Bar 1815; member of the council of censors 1827; member of governor's council 1831, and the same year chosen judge of the supreme court, and annually re-elected until 1838 when he was chosen a senator to Congress to succeed Benjamin Swift, and again elected in 1844. In January, 1853, on the death of Senator Upham he was appointed to the vacancy on the recommendation of the Vermont delegation in Congress because he was in Washington at the time; he discharged the duties of his office through that session, and returned to Washington the next winter to claim his seat, but as the Legislature had met in the meantime and failed to elect him or anybody else, the Senate refused to admit him on the ground that an executive appointee could not continue after the Legislature had an opportunity to fill the vacancy. He died at his home in Middlebury March 25, 1855. He was twice married and brought up a large family of children of whom the eldest was Hon. Edward J. Phelps, late minister to the Court of St. James.

UPHAM, WILLIAM, for ten years U. S. senator; was born Leicester, Mass., Aug. 5, 1792; son of Captain Samuel Upham who moved to Montpelier in 1802 and settled on a farm. He worked on a farm until he was 15 attending school only winters, when his right hand was crushed in a cider mill and he obtained paternal consent to being "educated." He studied law with Samuel Prentiss at Montpelier, was admitted to the bar in 1811 and practiced for about 30 years, becoming one of the strongest jury advocates the state has ever known. In 1827 elected town representative being re-elected in 1828 and 1830. In 1842 elected U. S. senator to succeed Samuel C. Crafts; at the end of his term he was re-elected but died before completing his term, Jan. 14, 1853. His wife was Sarah Keyes of Ashford, Conn.

FOOT, SOLOMON, senator, representative in Congress for 19 years, born in Cornwall Nov. 15, 1802; son of Dr. Solomon and Betsey (Crossett) Foot. An orphan at the age of nine, he was self-educated, taught district schools, fitted for college and graduated from Middlebury 1826. He was four years tutor at Middlebury, was preceptor of Castleton Academy and professor of natural philosophy at the Vermont Medical School at Castleton. While teaching he had studied law, was admitted to the bar 1831, and settled in practice at Rutland; went to the Legislature in 1833, again in 1836-8, being speaker the last two sessions; states attorney for Rutland County 1836-42, and in that year elected representative in Congress as an ardent Whig; his first appearance on the floor being to present a petition for the "protection of American producers against the unfriendly and ruinous competition of foreign nations," a position which he held as long as he was in Congress; he fought the Walker tariff bill in 1846, and was one of the few Republicans to vote against the low tariff bill in 1847. He served two terms in the house and refused re-election to return to the practice of law; was next fall sent to the Legislature by Rutland, re-elected in 1848, and in 1850 was elected by the Senate to succeed Judge Phelps; he carried through bills for the erection of a customs house at Burlington and court houses at Rutland and Windsor; and when the extra session of Congress was convened on account of the war July 4, 1861, he was unanimously elected president pro tem. continuing in this position through the 37th and 38th Congresses; he was with the leaders of his party in sharp antagonism to President Johnson and his policy but died March 28, 1866, before the crisis in that struggle came, though he clearly foresaw it. He was twice married; in 1839 to Emily Fay of Rutland, and second to Mrs. Anna Dora Hodges of Clarendon who survived him.

BRAINERD, LAWRENCE, elected senator to fill out William Upham's term; born East Hartford, March 16, 1794; the fifth of 13 children of Deacon Ezra and Mabel (Porter) Brainerd. When 14 years of age he went to St. Albans on the proceeds of walnuts he had gathered and sold, and with a capital of 75 cents began the struggle of life. He fitted himself to teach a district school, became a clerk in a store and, in 1816 embarked in business for himself, acquiring additional wealth at every step. His political life began with service as deputy sheriff; in 1834 represented St. Albans in the Legislature; abandoned the Whig party in 1840 and was of the 319 in Vermont to cast their votes for Birney for president that year; was the Liberty party's candidate for governor in 1846 and 1847; he presided over the first Republican convention July 1854; was a candidate for the state senate from his county, but was beaten by the old Whig animosity. Elected to the U. S. Senate to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Upham. He married Fidelia Barnet, daughter of William Gadcomb; she died in 1852; they had 12 children, of whom four sons and two daughters reached maturity; one daughter married J. Gregory Smith, afterwards governor, and the other F. S. Stranahan, lieutenant-governor; the sons Lawrence, Aldis, Erastus P., and Herbert, were all men of prominence.

COLLAMER, JACOB; judge, representative and senator in Congress, postmaster-general under Taylor, the only Vermonter before Proctor to serve in the cabinet, is the man whose statue as the representative Vermonter stands with that of Ethan Allen in the rotunda of the capitol at Washington. Was born at Troy, N. Y., Jan. 8, 1791; son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Van Ormun) Collamer; came to Vermont when four years of age, and by his own energy secured the means for a collegiate and professional education; graduated at the University of Vermont 1810; admitted to the bar 1813; after serving in the frontier campaign as lieutenant of artillery in 1812. In 1816 moved to Royalton where he practiced until 1836 when he went to Woodstock; represented Royalton in the Legislatures of 1821, '22, '27 and '28; states attorney for Windsor County 1822-24; member of constitutional convention 1836, that did away with the old governor's council and established a state senate. In 1833 elected assistant judge supreme court, re-elected annually until 1842 when he declined further service. The next year he was elected to Congress remaining until 1848, but a Legislative caucus that fall recommended him for a cabinet position and President Taylor on his inauguration named him for postmaster-general. On the death of President Taylor in July, 1850, Mr. Collamer resigned with the rest of the cabinet, and returned to his law practice in Vermont, and was elected circuit judge by the Legislature, holding this office until 1854 when the young Republican party elected him U. S. senator. When his term expired in 1860 he was re-elected for a second term and filled even a larger place in national councils. Vermont presented his name at the Chicago convention that year for the presidency, and he received ten votes on the first ballot of the convention, the only Vermonter except Edmunds who has been so honored in the national conventions of either party. He died in his home in Woodstock Nov. 9, 1865. He was a man who was loved by children, by neighbors, by all who knew him. He was a member of the Congregational Church for the last twenty years of his life, and he delivered a course of lectures, as reverent as they were learned, on "The Authenticity of the Scriptures." He was for some time professor of medical jurisprudence in the Vermont Medical College, at Woodstock, where he gave short but instructive courses of lectures. The University of Vermont conferred the degree of LL. D. on him in 1849, and Dartmouth in 1860. Mr. Collamer wedded, July 15, 1817, Mary N., daughter of Abijah Stone, and seven children were the fruit of this union.

POLAND, LUKE P., chief justice of the supreme court, both senator and representative in Congress; born at Westford, Nov. 1, 1815; son of Luther and Nancy (Potter) Poland. His educational advantages were limited to a few weeks each year in the public schools and a few months in the academy at Jericho when he was 17; was clerk in a store at Waterville and did work in his father's sawmill; taught school in the village of Morrisville and studied law in the office of Samuel A. Willard; was admitted to the bar in 1836 and 12 years later became one of the judges of the supreme court. Was register of probate for Lamoille County 1839-40; member of state constitutional convention 1843, and states attorney 1844-5; in 1860 chosen chief justice of the supreme court and held it until his election as senator in 1865, continuing two years. On the death of Senator Collamer, having some years before moved to the east side of the mountain and made St. Johnsbury his home, he was chosen by the Legislature to fill out the unexpired term of a little over a year, and in 1866 was elected representative to the lower House of Congress and Morrill transferred to the Senate which position he held by successive re-elections until 1875. Was chairman of the state's delegation to the Republican national convention in 1876; two years later St. Johnsbury sent him to the State Legislature, and in 1882, he made something of a contest with Senator Morrill for the latter's seat in the Senate. A surprise party however in the convention of the new second district secured him the nomination for the House away from General Grout, but he served only one term. In 1838, he married Martha Smith Page of Waterbury, who died 1853; they had three children; in 1854 married Adelia H., sister of his deceased wife. Judge Poland died July 2, 1887.

EDMUNDS, GEORGE FRANKLIN, Philadelphia, Pa. Lawyer, statesman. Born Richmond, Feb. 1, 1828; son of Ebenezer and Naomi (Briggs) Edmunds. Educated in common schools and with private tutor. Studied law in office of A. B. Maynard, Richmond, 1846-7; and Smalley & Phelps, Burlington, 1847-9; admitted to Vermont Bar 1849, and to partnership with Mr. Maynard in Richmond; removed to Burlington 1851, where he soon forged his way to the front against such formidable competitors as Ex-Lieutenant Governor Underwood, Edward J. Phelps, and David A. Smalley. Represented Burlington in Vermont Legislature 1854-59; speaker 1856-9; senator from Chittenden County and president pro tem 1861 and 1862; United States Senator 1866-91; resigned. Member Electoral Commission 1877; largely supported, against his protest, for president of United States in National Republican Convention 1880. Author of act of Mar. 22, 1882, for suppression of polygamy in Utah and disfranchisement of those who practice it, known as Edmunds Act; also of the anti-trust law of 1890; president pro tem of U. S. Senate during presidency of Gen. Chester A. Arthur; was leader in Senate on Republican side; notable as a constitutional lawyer. In 1897 became chairman of Monteray Commission appointed by executive committee of the Indianapolis Conference.

MORRILL, JUSTIN SMITH, born at Strafford, April 14, 1810; son of Nathaniel and Mary (Hunt) Morrill. Educated in the public schools, Thetford and Randolph academies; at the age of 15 entered a store as clerk; went to Portland, Me., in 1828 to fill a similar position; returned to Strafford in 1831 and became the partner of Jedediah Harris, leading merchant in town, business connection terminating with the death of Judge Harris in 1855; in 1854 received the nomination of the Whig party convention of his district for Congress and he was elected by a small majority, taking his seat Dec. 3, 1855; and thereafter affiliated with the new Republican party. He opposed the tariff in 1857 and carried through the House the first bill against Mormon polygamy; introduced the first bill to grant free lands for agricultural, scientific and industrial colleges; it was vetoed by President Buchanan but was again introduced and carried through by Mr. Morrill 1862; he was five times re-elected to the House where his influence was greater than any other member with the exception of Thaddeus Stevens. During the war he had charge of all tariff and tax legislation, and the "Morrill tariff" of 1861, and the internal revenue tax system of 1862. In 1866, after 12 years of honorable service in the House he was transferred to the U. S. Senate where he was authority on all questions relating to finance and taxation, and his period of service in the national Legislature was as remarkable for its duration as it was distinguished for its usefulness. Died Dec. 28, 1898. In 1851 he married Ruth Swan of Easton, Mass.

ROSS, JONATHAN, St. Johnsbury. Senator 1899-1900. Born Waterford, April 30, 1826; son of Royal and Eliza (Mason) Ross. Educated in the common schools; select school at Waterford; Phillips Academy, Danville; St. Johnsbury Academy; Dartmouth College, A. B. 1851; LL. D. 1855. In 1852 married Eliza Ann Carpenter, who died 1886; they had eight children, Caroline C., Elizabeth, Helen M. (deceased), Julia (Mrs. A. C. Aldrich), Martha (Mrs. J. W. Titcomb), Edith (Mrs. C. W. Braley), Edward Harlan, and Jonathan C. For his second wife married Miss Helen Daggett. Taught in Craftsbury, and was principal at Chelsea Academy for some time; studied law with Hon. William Hebard; admitted to Orange County Bar 1856; in partnership with A. J. Willard at St. Johnsbury two years; with G. A. Burbank one year, and with W. P. Smith a year. Treasurer Passumpsic Savings Bank 1858-68; states attorney Caledonia County 1862-3; represented St. Johnsbury in Legislature 1865, '66, '67; member council of censors 1869; senator from Caledonia County 1870; assistant judge supreme court of Vermont 1870-90; chief judge 1890 to Jan. 11, 1899, when he resigned to fill the vacancy in U. S. Senate caused by the death of Hon. Justin S. Morrill. Dec. 1, 1900, appointed by governor as chairman state railroad commission, serving two years, thereafter devoting his time to the profession of law until his death at St. Johnsbury, ———.

NILES, NATHANIEL; legislator, speaker, councilor, congressman, lawyer, judge, physician, preacher, inventor, and something of a poet; born South Kingston, R. I., April 3, 1741, the grandson of Samuel Niles, of Braintree, Mass.; commenced his collegiate course at Harvard, later graduating at Princeton; studied theology under Rev. Dr. Bellamy; studied law and medicine, taught school in New York city, preached at Norwich and Torrington, Conn., and indulged himself with mechanical experiments; invented a process of making wire from bar iron by water power, later building at Norwich, Conn., a woolen card manufactory. He was an ardent patriot in the Revolution; author of the ode entitled "The American Hero," 1776, and which became a war song of New England soldiers; came to West Fairlee and settled near center of town, preaching Sundays in his own house for 12 years; elected to the Legislature 1784 and chosen speaker; in 1784 was also elected with Moses Robinson and Ira Allen an agent to Congress to "transact and negotiate business of this state with that body." Judge of the supreme court 1784-8; member of the council 1785-7, and served in the constitutional convention of 1791, taking the lead with Chipman in securing the ratification of the Federal constitution; served in Congress 1791-5; again represented Fairlee in the Legislatures of 1800, '01,

'02, and in 1812, '13, '14; again member of council of censors 1799, and again returned to the governor's council 1803-8, and in the constitutional convention 1814. In politics, Mr. Niles was a Jeffersonian Republican, and for 20 years the most steadfast and popular champion of Democratic views in Vermont. A resolute antagonist of slavery, he led in formulating the demand of the state in 1805 for a constitutional amendment to forever prohibit the importation of slaves into the country; he "entered a solemn protest" against some of the lottery legislation of 1804; was chairman of the committee in 1814 that reported against the constitutional amendment proposed by Tennessee and Pennsylvania to reduce the term of senators from six to four years; was chairman on the part of the House of joint committee to consider the invitation of Massachusetts to send delegates to the Hartford convention, and which to the lasting credit of Vermont, by unanimous vote of the committee, reported against having anything to do with this traitorous scheme. He strenuously opposed the bank bill schemes proposed so thickly in the early years of the century, finally assenting in 1806 to the compromise for the establishment of the Vermont State Bank. At the age of nearly seventy-four he retired from his thirty years of almost continuous public service, and passed the rest of his days until his death in November, 1828, at his home in West Fairlee. Judge Niles was twice married, first to a daughter of Rev. Dr. Joseph Lathrop of West Springfield, Mass., and second to Elizabeth Watson of Plymouth, Mass. He left two sons, one of them, Nathaniel, became U. S. consul at Sardinia, acting plenipotentiary to Austria, and secretary of legation at the Court of St. James under General Cass.

BUCK, DANIEL, a lawyer by profession, was one of the earliest settlers of the state; represented Norwich in the Legislature several years, and held the speaker's chair 1795-6; again in Legislature in 1806; in 1792 counsel for Ira Allen in the fight in the Legislature over the latter's accounts, one phase of which resulted in political revolution and ousted Governor Chittenden from office one term; member of the convention at Bennington that adopted the act of union, but took the lead in opposing that action and urging Vermont to continue an independent little republic by herself; took a leading part in the passage of the act of 1806, empowering judges of the supreme court of judicature to grant divorces; was active in the Legislature of 1806 for the establishment of a state bank; served as states attorney 1794, and one of the state's representatives in Congress 1795-9, being an ardent Federalist, while his colleague, Matthew Lyon, was a red-hot Democrat. His declining years were spent in Chelsea, where he practiced his profession until his death in 1817.

LYON, MATTHEW, elected to Congress from three states, was born in Wicklow, Ireland, about 1746; attended school at Dublin where he obtained an English education and a smattering of Latin; apprenticed to a printer and bookbinder, but at the age of 13 a sea captain induced him to run away and come to America, even though it meant 15 years of slavery to pay his passage. He was in Vermont in 1776, and with a lieutenant's commission was stationed at Jericho with a squad of men, who later refused to serve because of support and Lyon was court-martialed and cashiered for cowardice. He was reinstated in July, 1777, and made paymaster of the Northern army. After the battle of Bennington he was a farm laborer of Governor Chittenden who made him his deputy-secretary and clerk of the court of confiscation; became a captain and colonel of the militia; represented Arlington in the Legislature 1779-82; moved to Fair Haven in 1783, where he conducted a saw and grist mill, and erected an iron mill in 1785 and a paper mill soon after. In the iron mill he turned out hoes, axes and nail rods; made paper from basswood long years before it was thought of anywhere else; was selectman in Fair Haven 1788, 1790, and 1791; the town's representative in the Legislature ten years, and later established "The Farmers Library" and a political sheet, the "Fair Haven Gazette"; was assistant judge of county court 1786; and on the admission of the state into the Union became a red-hot Democratic leader, and immediately a candidate for Congress; contested the election with Israel Smith and Isaac Tichenor in 1791, '93, '95; in 1795 was elected to Congress, taking his seat in 1797, he and Andrew Jackson in the Senate being the two most rabid anti-Washington men in Congress. He had many bitter fights in Congress, but the thing with which Lyon's name is most strikingly linked in history is his martyrdom to the alien and sedition law. At the fall term of U. S. court in Rutland in 1798 he was indicted for "scurrilous, scandalous, malicious, and defamatory language" about President Adams, published in the Windsor Journal; he pleaded his own case at the trial, but was convicted and sentenced to four months' imprisonment and a $1,000 fine, and was confined in jail at Vergennes and treated with much hardship. While in jail he was re-elected to Congress by 500 majority; his journey thither being one of triumph in a coach and four under the American flag. In a prolonged controversy over the presidential election in 1800, he cast the vote of the state for Jefferson. At the expiration of his term in Congress he moved to Kentucky, established the first printing office in the state and was elected to Congress in 1804; moved to Arkansas, and in 1820 was again elected to Congress, but died at Little Rock, Aug. 1, before taking his seat. In 1840 Congress refunded to Colonel Lyon's heirs the fine he had paid in Vermont under the sedition law.

MORRIS, LEWIS R., six years Congressman; a native of New York, where he was born Nov. 2, 1760; settled in Springfield about 1786; was a member of the Bennington convention that voted to ratify the Federal constitution, and one of the commissioners to Congress that completed the negotiation for admission to the Union in 1791; represented Springfield in the Legislature 1795-6; 1803-'05-'06-'08; secretary of the constitutional Convention at Windsor 1793; member National House of Representatives 1797 to 1803. Soon after settling in Springfield he married the daughter of Rev. Buckley Olcott or Charlestown, N. H., who lived but a few years, and later he married Ellen, daughter of Gen. Arad Hunt of Vernon. He died at Vernon, Dec. 29, 1825.

CHAMBERLAIN, WILLIAM; soldier, councilor, judge, congressman, and lieutenant-governor; born Hopkinton, Mass., in 1753, and when 20 years old moved with his father to London, N. H.; enlisted promptly when the war for independence opened, was in the Canada expedition as an orderly sergeant, and one of nine officers and privates out of a company of seventy that survived to take part in the battle of Trenton, N. J. Returning to his New Hampshire home, he volunteered again upon Burgoyne's invasion and was in the battle of Bennington where he distinguished himself by his bravery; settled in Peacham about 1780 and was town clerk for 12 years; justice of the peace 24 years; town representative 12 years; chief judge of Caledonia County court 17 years, and councilor seven years, 1796-1803. Was twice elected to Congress, 1802 and again in 1808; the Federalist victory of 1813 elected him lieutenant-governor with Martin Chittenden, and they were re-elected in 1814; was an Adams presidential elector in 1800. The close and hard-fought election of 1815 retired him to private life finally, though he ran a little better than Chittenden. He died Sept. 27, 1828.

ELLIOT, JAMES; born Gloucester, Mass., Aug. 18, 1775, and reared as a farm servant in the family of Colonel Sanderson of Petersham; was taught the rudiments of grammar by his employer, but otherwise was self-educated. He came to Guilford when fifteen, and engaged as a clerk; filled with military ardor, at age of eighteen he enlisted at Springfield, Mass., and was in service three years against the insurgents in Pennsylvania and the Indians in Ohio. Returning to Guilford in 1798, he published a 278-page volume of his political and miscellaneous works; read law, was admitted to the bar and settled in practice in Brattleboro. He was elected to Congress to succeed Lewis R. Morris, and on retiring in 1809 published a paper for a time in Philadelphia; entered the army in the war of 1812 as a captain, but after brief service returned to Vermont and resumed the practice of law at Brattleboro; elected to the Legislature in 1818-19; removed to Newfane and was again sent to the Legislature in 1837-8; was county clerk, judge of probate, and the last two years of life was states attorney. He died Nov. 10, 1839, aged 6½ years.

OLIN, GIDEON; a Congressman and one of the founders of the state, was born in Rhode Island in 1743 and came to Vermont and settled in Shaftsbury in 1776; was delegate to Windsor convention of June 4, 1777, and a representative in the first Legislature under the new state government in 1778; in the Legislature from 1780 to 1793, and speaker from 1788 to 1793; judge of Bennington County court 1781-98; served in the council from 1793-8, and again as judge 1800-2, and chief judge 1807-11, a total judicial service of twenty-three years. He was a delegate to the constitutional convention of 1791 and 1793, and was in Congress two terms, from 1803 to 1807. He died in January 1823. Congressman Abraham B. Olin of New York was his son and Congressman Henry Olin of this state his nephew.

WITHERELL, JAMES; Congressman 1807-8; born Mansfield, Mass., June 16, 1759; enlisted at age of 16 in the Revolutionary service, continuing therein from the early siege of Boston until peace was won and the army disbanded in 1783, when he came out as an officer with $70 in Continental currency. Studied medicine at Mansfield, and in 1789 began practice at Fair Haven, where he married Amy Hawkins, a lineal descendant of Roger Williams. He was a red-hot Democrat and a hearty associate of Matthew Lyon; represented Fair Haven from 1789 to 1802; assistant judge of Rutland County court 1801-3, and chief justice 1803-6; councilor 1802-7, when he was elected to Congress; before his term was completed President Jefferson appointed him one of the judges of the territory of Michigan, with executive and legislative duties to perform as well as judicial. In the war of 1812 he commanded a corps at Detroit and when the post fell before the British he refused to surrender his command but allowed his men to disperse and escape while he remained to be taken prisoner. He again lived in Fair Haven while on parole, but when exchanged returned to Detroit, and in 1826 President John Quincy Adams appointed him secretary of the territory. He died at Detroit Jan. 9, 1838.

SHAW, SAMUEL; Congressman 1808-13; a Democrat of the Matthew Lyon school, was born at Dighton, Mass., in December, 1768; came to Putney when 10 years of age, and at 19 settled himself at Castleton and began, after two years of study, the practice of medicine; represented Castleton in Legislature 1800-7, when he was elected to both houses, but accepted the office of councilor; defeated the following year, he was elected to Congress, serving from 1808 to 1813; on his retirement was appointed surgeon in the U. S. army, attaining an eminence which was remarkable, considering his limited education. He died at Clarendon, Oct. 22, 1827.

HUBBARD, JONATHAN HATCH; Congressman 1808-11; born in Windsor in 1768; died there Sept. 20, 1849; had a liberal education and studied law and was admitted to bar in 1790, practicing until his election to Congress in 1808. He served until 1811, and in 1813 became judge of the supreme court of Vermont, continuing in office until 1815.

STRONG, WILLIAM; Congressman 1811-15, 1819-20; born at Lebanon, Conn., in 1763; son of Benajah and Polly (Bacon) Strong; was self-educated by means of books he could borrow, and for several years was engaged in making land surveys in Grand Isle county. Returning to Hartford and engaging in farming he quickly became a man of influence in the community; represented Hartford in the Legislature 1798-9, 1801, '02, '15, '16, '17, and '18; was sheriff of Windsor county eight years, from 1802 to 1810; judge of supreme court of Windsor county in 1817, and a member of the council of censors in 1834; first elected to Congress 1811, serving two terms; in 1819 returned again, serving one term. In 1793 married Abigail Hutchinson of Norwich; they had nine children; of these, John P. and Charles were woolen manufacturers at Quechee. He died Jan. 28, 1840, at the age of seventy-seven.

BRADLEY, WILLIAM C., Congressman 1813-15, 1823-7; born Westminster,

March 23, 1782; son of Senator Stephen R. and Merab (Atwater) Bradley. He was twice a congressman, long the leader of the Jacksonian Democracy of the state, and in the opinion of Pliny White, "all things considered the greatest man Vermont has produced." He began to write poetry at the age of six years, and when twelve his first prose work, "The Rights of Youth," was published; was a great Bible student, and at the age of eleven was fitted for college; at twelve was studying Hebrew; at thirteen he entered Yale, but was expelled before his freshman year had ended; at eighteen was secretary of the commissioners of bankruptcy, and before he was of age was states attorney for Windham County holding this position seven years; at twenty-four represented his town in the Legislature; at thirty was a member of the governor's council, and at thirty-two was sent to Congress; was Democratic nominee for governor in 1830, 1834, '35, '36; twice in 1837-8, joined the Free Soil party in 1848, and later the Republican party. Elected to Congress as a Jeffersonian Democrat in 1812; at the expiration of his term he was appointed agent of the United States, under the treaty of Ghent, for fixing the north-eastern boundary, a work that required five years; again elected to Congress in 1822 and 1824; again represented Westminster in the Legislature of 1850 and was a member of the constitutional convention of 1857. In 1858, after fifty-six years of practice, he took leave of the bar at Newfane. He died at Westminster in March, 1867, following soon the death of his wife, a woman of rare beauty of person and character.

RICH, CHARLES; Congressman 1817-25; born Warwick, Mass., Sept. 13, 1771, coming to Shoreham with his father in 1787, making the distance on foot. Attended school for fifteen months, his aid being required by his father in clearing land and erecting mills. In 1791 married a daughter of Nicholas Wells; commenced life on land given him by Mrs. Rich's father, becoming a wealthy man. A Democrat; represented Shoreham in the Legislature in 1800, and re-elected eleven times; elected to Congress 1812, and re-elected except for the term of 1815-17, till 1825.

CHIPMAN, DANIEL; Congressman 1815-17; brother of Nathaniel, the youngest of seven sons, born Salisbury, Conn., Oct. 22, 1763; fitted for college at Tinmouth, graduated at Dartmouth 1788; LL. D. from Middlebury 1849; studied law with his brother, opened an office in Poultney 1790, but moved to Middlebury in 1794; represented Middlebury in Legislature eight years, was speaker in 1813 and 1814, and member of governor's council 1808. In 1814 was elected to Congress, resigning on account of ill health after one session; moved to Rip-ton 1828, and in 1822 published a treatise on law contracts; appointed reporter of decisions of supreme court 1823; states attorney for Addison County 1797 to 1817; member five different constitutional conventions, 1793, 1814, 1836, 1843, 1850. In attending the latter, at age of 84, he incurred the disease that ended in his death.

JEWETT, LUTHER; Congressman 1815-17; physician, preacher and editor of St. Johnsbury's first paper; born Canterbury, Conn., in 1772; graduated at Dartmouth 1792; came to St. Johnsbury 1800, where he practiced medicine; licensed to preach by the Coos Association, and did so for ten years. In 1827 started the first paper in St. Johnsbury, "The Friend," (anti-Masonic). July 3, 1828, he issued the first number of the Farmers' Herald, Whig in politics, continuing it four years; in 1815 elected to Congress, serving one term. He died in 1860 at age of eighty-seven.

LANGDON, CHAUNCY; Congressman 1815-17; born Farmington, Conn., Nov. 8, 1763; son of Ebenezer Langdon; graduated at Yale 1787; studied law at Litchfield, and removed to "the Grants" in 1788. Came first to Windsor, later going to Castleton; was register of probate 1792-7; judge of probate 1798-9; represented Castleton in Legislature 1813-14, 1817, '19, '20, and 1822; elected to Congress with the full Federalist delegation 1814, the party's last stand in Vermont. Was councilor 1808, and 1828-30; trustee Middlebury College nineteen years. He died at Castleton July 23, 1830, and with his wife who died four years later, is buried at Castleton. They left one daughter and two sons: Lucy, (Mrs.

Chas. K. Williams of Rutland); Benjamin Franklin, who succeeded his father as lawyer and judge at Castleton, and John Jay, who moved to the South.

LYON, ASA; Congressman 1815-17; born Pomfret, Conn., Dec. 31, 1763; died April 4, 1841; graduated Dartmouth 1790; preached at Sunderland, Mass., nearly a year; soon after appeared at Grand Isle, which was originally united with North and South Hero in one town under the name of the Two Heroes. Here he organized the first Congregational Church, serving as its minister forty years, his services for the most part being gratuitous. He was also the foremost public man of the community and its political leader; represented South Hero in the Legislature 1799 until 1803; 1804-7, and in 1808 until he entered the council; represented Grand Isle in the Senate 1812-15, when he was elected to Congress. Was chief judge of County Court 1805, '06, '08, and 1813. A Federalist; led the opposition to Governor Galusha in the Legislature of 1811.

MARSH, CHARLES; Congressman 1815-17; born Lebanon, Conn., July 10, 1765; son of Lieut-Gov. Joseph Marsh; came to Hartford 1773; graduated from Dartmouth 1786; took a course in the law school of Judge Reeves at Litchfield, Conn., and practiced at Woodstock; in 1797 appointed by President Washington district attorney for the district of Vermont; elected to Congress 1814, serving one term; one of the founders of the American Colonization Society; chosen one of the board of trustees of Dartmouth College in 1809, continuing until his death at Woodstock, Jan. 11, 1849. The degree of LL. D. was conferred on him by Dartmouth College. In 1793 he married Nancy Collins of Litchfield, Conn., and after her decease he married Susan, widow of Josiah Arnold of St. Johnsbury. There were two children by the first wife and five by the second; one son, Lyndon Arnold, was a lawyer at Woodstock and register of probate for the district; Charles, a lawyer, died at the age of twenty-seven, and Joseph was professor of theory and practice in the University of Vermont.

NOYES, JOHN; Congressman 1815-17; born Atkinson, N. H.; graduated at Dartmouth 1795, and became a tutor there, among his pupils being Daniel Webster; engaged in theological study and fitted himself for the ministry, but gave it up and resumed teaching; in 1800 moved to Brattleboro and engaged in trade with General Mann, the grandfather of the wife of Gen. Geo. B. McClellan. Mr. Noyes represented the town in the Legislature 1800-10, 1812, and in 1814 was elected to Congress, serving one term; removed to Dummerston, where he lived four years, then retired to a farm in Putney where he died Oct. 26, 1841. He wedded, in 1804, Polly, the oldest daughter of Rutherford Hayes, the grandfather of the President.

ALLEN, HEMAN; Congressman 1817-18; "Chili" Allen, as he was called to distinguish him from his distant relative, Heman Allen of Milton, who was also in Congress, was born at Poultney in 1779, son of Heber Allen and nephew of Ethan and Ira, both at Poultney in 1779. Following his father's death he was adopted by his uncle Ira at Colchester, given a good education and graduated from Dartmouth 1795; adopted the profession of law, but did not practice; sheriff of Chittenden County 1808-9; chief justice of Chittenden County 1811-14; active member of the Legislature 1812-17; was quartermaster of militia, with title of brigadier, and a trustee of the University of Vermont. Elected representative to Congress in 1817, but resigned in 1818 to accept from President Monroe the office of U. S. Marshal for the district of Vermont; in 1823 appointed minister to Chili, resigning 1828; in 1830 appointed president of the U. S. Branch Bank at Burlington, which he held until the expiration of its charter, after which he settled at Highgate where he died April 9, 1852, being buried in the Allen cemetery at Burlington.

HUNTER, WILLIAM; Congressman 1817-19; born in ———, Vermont; member of the Legislature 1807, 1809; state councilor 1809, 1814, 1815; elected representative to Congress, serving from Dec. 1, 1817, to March 3, 1819.

MERRILL, ORASMUS C.; Congressman 1817-19; born Farmington, Conn., June 18, 1775; came to Bennington April, 1791, and apprenticed to Anthony Haswell, a printer; engaged in business for himself, his first printed book being Webster's spelling book; studied law and admitted to the bar June, 1804; major U. S. infantry March 3, 1813; lieutenant-colonel 26th infantry as rifleman, Sept. 4, 1814; transferred to 11th infantry as lieutenant-colonel Sept. 26, 1814; register of probate 1815; clerk of the courts 1818; member of Congress 1817-19; represented Bennington in constitutional convention and Legislature 1822; judge probate court 1822, 1841, 1846; states attorney 1823-4; councilor 1824-6, and member first state senate; also postmaster several years. Was defeated for re-election to Congress 1818 by R. C. Mallory; died April 12, 1865. The late Timothy Merrill of Montpelier was his brother.

RICHARDS, MARK; Congressman 1817-21; born Waterbury, Conn., July 15, 1760; a soldier of the Revolution at age of sixteen, in service at Stony Point, Monmouth, Red Bank and Valley Forge; settled in Boston and became wealthy in mercantile pursuits; moved to Westminster in 1796; represented the town in Legislature 1801, 1802, 1804, 1805; sheriff Windham County 1806-10; in governor's council 1813-15; elected to Congress 1816, serving two terms; represented his town 1824-6, 1828; lieutenant-governor 1830-1, on the ticket with Governor Crafts. Again in the Legislature 1832-4. He died at Westminster, Aug. 10, 1844, aged eighty-four.

MEECH, EZRA; Congressman 1819-21, 1825-7; born New London, Conn., July 26, 1773, and came with his father to Hinesburg 1785. A hunter and trapper, he branched out into the fur trade, became associated with John Jacob Astor in it, and in 1806 became agent of the Northwest Fur Co.; in 1809 was agent for supplying the British government with spars and timber; in 1795 opened a store at Charlotte Four Corners; purchased a farm in 1806 on the lake shore in Shelburne, opened a store there and continued in fur trade; engaged in manufacture of potash and in 1808 in oak lumber which he shipped to Quebec. Elected to the Legislature 1805-7; chief justice Chittenden County court 1822-3; member constitutional conventions 1820-6; elected to Congress 1818, and again in 1824. His candidacies for governor were during the period that the state was swept by anti-Masonry, and it was under his leadership that the skeleton of a Democratic organization was preserved; but before 1840 he became a Whig. He was twice married, in 1800 to Mary McNeil, who died while he was in Congress, and subsequently to Mrs. L. N. Clark. He died at Shelburne, Sept. 23, 1856, aged eighty-three.

MALLORY, ROLLIN CARLOS; Congressman 1819-31; born Cheshire, Conn., May 27, 1784; graduated from Middlebury 1805; studied law with Horatio Seymour at Middlebury and Robert Temple at Rutland, and settled at Castleton in 1806; taught one year; admitted to the bar 1807 and practiced till 1818, when he moved to Poultney. Was secretary of the governor and council 1807, 1809-12, 1815-19; states attorney for Rutland County 1811-13, and 1816; elected to Congress 1818, serving until 1831, becoming a leader among protectionists; was chairman of committee on manufactures that reported the tariff of 1828—a "tariff of abominations," as the Democrats called it, that led to South Carolina's act of nullification. This tariff was projected at first in the interest of the woolen manufacturers, but ended in including all the manufacturing interests. His sudden death at Baltimore, Md., April 15, 1831, cut short a career which promised to be continent-wide, and hardly second to that of Clay, Webster and Hayne, in the great economic struggle ushered in by the 1828 tariff.

KEYES, ELIAS; Congressman 1821-3; a native of Ashford, Conn., was one of the first settlers of Stockbridge, whither he came in 1784 or '85. He represented the town sixteen years, and was in the governor's council fourteen years, from 1803 to 1818, except the one term of 1814; assistant judge Windham County court, 1806-14; chief judge 1815-17; member constitutional convention 1814, and in Congress 1821-3.

WHITE, PHINEAS; Congressman 1821-3; a native of South Hadley, Mass.; born Oct. 30, 1770; graduated from Dartmouth 1797; studied law with Charles Marsh at Woodstock and Judge Samuel Porter at Dummerston; began practice at Putney 1800; postmaster 1802-9; register of probate 1800-9; states attorney 1813; represented his town 1815-20; judge of probate several years, and chief judge of the county 1818-20, or until elected to Congress. On his return he gave up law and took up farming; member constitutional convention 1836; state senator 1838-40, and prominent in Masonry, being grand master of the grand lodge of the state. He died at Putney, July 6, 1847, aged seventy-six. His wife, Esther, whom he married July 1, 1801, survived him for nine years.

BUCK, DANIEL AZRO A., son of the former, also speaker in Congress, was born in Norwich, Jan. 16, 1789; graduated from Middlebury College 1807; student at Military Academy at West Point; commissioned a lieutenant in the army in 1808; resigned in 1811 and studied law; in 1813 raised a company of rangers and served until 1815, becoming captain of the 21st Regiment in the U. S. army; practiced law at Chelsea; member of the Legislature 16 years, 12 years as speaker, a length of service equalled only by Gideon Olin and James L. Martin in the whole history of the state; states attorney for Washington County six years; presidential elector 1820; represented Vermont in Congress 1822 and 1826; died at Washington, D. C., Dec. 24, 1841.

OLIN, HENRY; Congressman 1824-5; born Salisbury, May 6, 1768; son of Justice and Sarah (Dwinell) Olin, and nephew of the distinguished patriot, Gideon Olin. Settled in Leicester 1788; represented his town in the Legislature 1799 and re-elected, except for four years, until 1825, and to the council in 1820 and 1821. This twenty-three years of legislative service was matched by a similar period on the bench. Assistant judge of county court when twenty-three years old, holding place eight years; then chief judge for fifteen years more. In 1824 elected to Congress to fill unexpired term of Charles Rich; lieutenant-governor 1827-30; member constitutional conventions of 1814, '22 and '28. He died at Salisbury in August, 1837, having moved there the previous spring.

WALES, GEORGE E., Congressman 1825-9; born Westminster, May 13, 1792; studied law at Westminster and Woodstock, admitted to bar in 1812, and settled at Hartford that year; represented Hartford in the Legislature 1822-4; elected speaker in his first term on the resignation of D. Azro A. Buck, holding the position as long as he was in the house. A nomination to Congress followed these triumphs, and he was elected in 1825 and in 1829. His habits of dissipation and prominence in Masonry, being grand master in 1825-7, wrecked his political career; he was judge of probate 1847-50, and town clerk 1840 until his death at Hartford, Jan. 8, 1860. His wife was Amanda Lathrop of Sharon, by whom he had seven children.

ALLEN, HEMAN, of Milton; Congressman 1827-9, 1832-9; born Ashfield, Mass., June 14, 1777; the son of Enoch Allen. On his mother's side he descended from Elijah Belding, first town clerk of Deerfield. An orphan at twelve, the family came to Grand Isle where two of his uncles had preceded him, Heman remaining behind two years for a course of study at Chesterfield, N. H.; at Grand Isle he studied with Rev. Asa Lyon; read law with Elnathan Keyes at Burlington and Judge Turner at Fairfield, and opened a law office at Milton, where he won a high reputation as the best real estate lawyer in the circuit. He represented Milton in the Legislature 1810, and for eleven years thereafter whenever he would be a candidate; was Milton's earliest lawyer and a man universally admired. Was first nominated for Congress in 1826, serving only one term, but again elected in 1832 and three times thereafter, and several times a colleague of his namesake of Colchester in the Legislature. Dec. 4, 1804, he married Sarah, daughter of Dr. John Prentiss of St. Albans; they had nine children, of whom five lived to maturity: George became professor of Latin and Greek in the University of Pennsylvania; Joseph W. became a lawyer, and Sarah was the wife of Rev. J. R. Converse. He died Dec. 11, 1844.

HUNT, JONATHAN; Congressman 1827-32; born Aug 12, 1780; son of Jonathan and Lavina (Swan) Hunt; graduated from Dartmouth 1807, studied law at Brattleboro and was admitted to the Windham County Bar. He practiced at Brattleboro; was first president of the old Brattleboro Bank in 1821, holding the position through life. He represented the town in 1816-17, and 1824; succeeded Wm. C. Bradley in Congress 1824, and was twice re-elected, holding the office until his death in Washington, May, 15, 1832. He married Jane Maria Leavitt; among their five children being Wm. Morris Hunt, the artist of world-wide renown, and Richard M. Hunt, the New York architect.

CAHOON, WILLIAM; Congressman 1827-33; born Providence, R. I., in 1774; son of Daniel Cahoon and brother of Daniel Cahoon, Jr., the first settler of Lyndon. He succeeded his father as town clerk of Lyndon in 1808 and held it interruptedly until elected to Congress; elected town representative 1802 and re-elected eight times; delegate to the constitutional conventions of 1814 and 1828; presidential elector 1808, and judge of Caledonia County court 1811-19, and councilor 1815-20. Was for many years one of the most influential Democratic leaders of the state, and one of the candidates for councilor counted out in 1813. He obtained the title of general in the militia and was commander of the fourth division at the time of the war of 1812, with the rank of major-general.

EVERETT, HORACE; Congressman 1829-43; born in Vermont in 1780; graduated from Brown University 1797; studied law and practiced at Windsor; was states attorney for Windsor county 1813-17; represented Windsor in Legislature 1819, 1820, 1822, 1824, 1834, and member state constitutional convention of 1828, and in that year was elected to Congress as a Whig, defeating George E. Wales; was re-elected to 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th and 27th Congresses, serving from Dec. 7, 1829, to March 3, 1843. His chief fame in Congress was in advocating the rights of the Indians. He died at Windsor, Jan. 30, 1851.

DEMING, BENJAMIN F.; Congressman 1833-5; born Danville, in 1790; began life as clerk in a store and then a merchant at Danville; county clerk sixteen years, 1817-32; judge of probate 1821-32; and councilor 1827-33; elected to Congress 1833, serving one term. He died while on his way home, at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., July 11, 1834, aged forty-four.

JANES, HENRY F.; Congressman 1835-7; born Brimfield, Mass., in October, 1792; son of Solomon and Beulah (Fisk) Janes. The family early came to Calais, and he studied law at Montpelier, enlisted in a company and was in the battle of Plattsburg in the war of 1812, and settled in Waterbury for the practice of his profession. Was postmaster 1820-9; councilor 1830-4; elected to Congress for one term; state treasurer 1838-41; member of the council of censors 1848, and represented Waterbury several terms in the Legislature, his last election being in 1855. In 1826 he married Fanny, daughter of Gov. Ezra Butler; and Dr. Henry Janes of Waterbury, a distinguished physician and war surgeon, was their son. He died June 6, 1879.

FLETCHER, ISAAC; Congressman 1837-41; a native of Massachusetts, born 1784, and a graduate from Dartmouth. Studied law and began practice at Lyndon, literally wearing himself out with overwork. Represented Lyndon four years; was states attorney eight years, and adjutant-general on the staff of Governor Van Ness. His health failed ere he got far in his congressional service, and he died in October, 1842.

SMITH, JOHN; Congressman 1839-41; born Barre, Mass., Aug. 12, 1879; son of Deacon Samuel Smith. The family moved to St. Albans in 1800, where he studied law with his brother-in-law, Roswell Hutchins, and then with Benjamin Swift, was admitted to the bar in 1810, forming a partnership with Mr. Swift which continued seventeen years, until Mr. Swift went to Congress. He represented the town in the Legislature 1827-38, with the exception of 1834, and was speaker in '32 and '33; was states attorney seven years, 1827-33. In 1838 elected as a Democrat to Congress, but for only one term, the district being overwhelmingly Whig, the great political storm of 1840 leaving him outside the breastworks. After 1845 he gave his time and energy to railroad enterprises, and it was largely to his boldness of action that the Vermont & Canada road was made a reality and the last link forged that was to connect New England with the great lakes; but the strain and anxiety undermined his health and led to his sudden death, Nov. 20, 1858. He married, Sept. 18, 1814, Miss Maria W. Curtis of Troy, N. Y., and Gov. John Gregory and Congressman Worthington C. Smith were their sons.

YOUNG, AUGUSTUS; Congressman 1841-3; born Arlington, March 20, 1785; studied law and was admitted to the bar at St. Albans 1810; began practice at Stowe, then moved to Craftsbury where his active life was spent; represented the town eight years; states attorney for Orleans County four years; judge of probate 1830; state senator three terms; elected to Congress 1840, but declined re-election; returned to St. Albans 1847, and for several years was judge of probate, but devoted most of his time until his death, June 17, 1857, to literary and scientific pursuits, and was state naturalist in 1856.

MARSH, GEORGE PERKINS; Congressman 1843-9; son of Congressman Charles Marsh and grandson of the lieutenant-governor, a lawyer, diplomat, philologist and of world-wide fame as an author and scholar, was perhaps the most broadly accomplished man the state ever produced. He was born March 15, 1801, graduated at Dartmouth 1820, studied law in his father's office, admitted to the bar, and settled at Burlington. In 1835 a member of the governor's council, in 1842 elected to Congress, continuing until 1849; was minister to Turkey, where he rendered important service to the cause of religious and civil toleration in the Turkish empire; in 1852 was charged with a special mission to Greece, which he filled with added reputation. In 1853

he was relieved and returned to Vermont and was appointed one of the commissioners to rebuild the present state house at Montpelier, and, in 1857, he was appointed railroad commissioner, serving two years. In 1861 President Lincoln appointed him minister to Italy, which position he held twenty-one years until his death, in Valombrosa, not far from Florence, July 23, 1882. During his residence abroad he traveled extensively in the East and in Europe, passing some time in Denmark, Sweden and Norway, where he had long been recognized as a leading Scandinavian scholar. His library, one of the finest in the country, rich beyond compare in Scandinavian literature, he presented to the University of Vermont, of whose corporation he was chosen a member in 1844. Mr. Marsh was twice married, first to Harriet, daughter of Ozias Buell of Burlington; second, to Caroline Crane of Berkley, Mass., a woman of literary power and an author of some reputation.

HENRY, WILLIAM; Congressman 1847-51; born in New Hampshire in 1788; received a common school education, moved to Bellows Falls, where he was cashier of the Bank of Bellows Falls for fifteen years, and held various stations in public life; was a member of the Harrisburg convention in 1839 which nominated General Harrison and a presidential elector in 1840. In 1846 he was elected to the House of Representatives and re-elected two terms. In 1860 again a presidential elector, visiting Mr. Lincoln at his Illinois home. Mr. Henry died at Bellows Falls April 17, 1861.

PECK, LUCIUS; Congressman 1847-51; born Waterbury in October, 1802; the son of Gen. John Peck. Was a cadet at West Point 1822, but resigned after a year's study, entering upon the study of law first with Judge Prentiss at Montpelier, and then with Dennison Smith at Barre, and was admitted to the bar 1825; represented Barre in 1831, but soon after moved to Montpelier. In 1846 the Democrats nominated him for Congress and elected him, and re-elected him in 1848; was also twice the Democratic candidate for governor; U. S. district attorney 1853-7, by appointment of President Pierce. In partnership with Hon. B. F.

Fifield, he resumed his professional practice, being especially potent in railroad litigation; was president of Vermont & Canada road until his death in Lowell, Mass., Dec. 28, 1866. In 1830 he married a daughter of Ira Day of Barre, who died in 1845.

HEBARD, WILLIAM; Congressman 1849-53; read law with Wm. Nutting at Randolph, admitted to bar 1827; married Elizabeth Stockwell (Brown) Sept. 12, 1830; practiced law at East Randolph, but moved to Chelsea in 1845, remaining until his death, Oct. 20, 1875. Represented Randolph four years and Chelsea five years in the Legislature; state senator 1836-8; states attorney 1832-6; judge of probate 1838-41; judge of supreme court 1842-4. In 1848 was elected to Congress, and again in 1850; delegate to national Republican convention 1860, which named Mr. Lincoln for president.

MEACHAM, JAMES; Congressman 1849-56; born Rutland, Aug. 10, 1810; left an orphan he was educated by a benevolent neighbor and graduated from Middlebury College 1832; studied theology at Andover, and was settled as pastor of the Congregational Church at New Haven 1838, having previously taught in academies at Castleton and St. Albans, and for two years, 1836-8, been a tutor at Middlebury. In 1846 returned to college as professor of elocution and English literature; in 1848 elected to Congress, serving four terms, and had been nominated for the fifth term at the time of his death, Aug. 25, 1856.

MINER, AHIMAN L.; Congressman 1851-3; born Middletown, Sept. 23, 1804; son of Deacon Gideon and Rachel (Davison) Miner; worked on his father's farm until of age; fitted for college, but studied law instead, and was admitted to the bar in 1832; practiced for two years at Wallingford, then moved to Manchester; represented that town four years in the Legislature, and county senator 1840; clerk of House of Representatives 1836-8; states attorney for Bennington County 1843-4; register of probate seven years and judge of probate three years 1846-9; obtained his nomination for Congress in 1851 after a hard fought pre-convention contest, Col. Calvin Townsley opposing him. He was twice married and had eight children; he died July 19, 1886.

BARTLETT, THOMAS, JR.; Congressman 1851-3; a native of Burke, the son of Thomas Bartlett, a man of ability and local prominence. Young Bartlett studied law and settled in Lyndon in 1839; was states attorney 1841-2; member state senate 1840-1, and in 1850 elected to Congress for a single term. Was the town's representative 1854-5; member constitutional conventions of 1850 and 1857, presiding over the former body.

James Meacham, representative to Congress, in 1856, was chosen to fill the vacancy. He died at Rutland Sept. 9, 1860.

WALTON, ELIAKIM P.; Congressman 1857-63; born Montpelier, Feb. 17, 1812; son of Gen. E. P. and Prussia (Parsons) Walton; educated in the public schools of Montpelier; learned the printer's trade in his father's office; studied law with Samuel and S. B. Prentiss when the former was U. S. senator. When twenty-one, in 1833, was taken into partnership with his father in the publication of the Vermont Watchman and State Journal; soon the main editorial work fell upon him, and for thirty years, except while in Congress, was constantly in the editorial harness. He established the first exclusively legislative newspaper, which soon expanded into a daily. Early in the civil war he started a daily, with correspondents in every Vermont regiment at the front and in this way gathered and preserved much historical data of priceless value. Represented Montpelier in the Legislature 1853, and three years later elected to Congress, and re-elected in 1858 and 1860. He returned to private life, continued in charge of the Watchman until 1868, when he sold it to J. & J. M. Poland, but continued to write as long as he lived. Was member constitutional convention of 1870 and senator from Washington County 1874-8; was three times a delegate to national conventions; president Vermont Historical Society from the retirement of Rev. Dr. Lord in 1876, and of the Vermont Editors' and Publishers' Association from its organization until 1881. 1853-54; states attorney 1858-60; represented Royalton in Legislature 1861-3; U. S. district attorney for Vermont 1864-9. There was no election to Congress in September, 1874, and on the second trial in November, Denison won out by a coalition of Democrats with the dissatisfied Republicans and re-elected for a second term in 1876. He married, in 1846, Eunice Dunbar of Hartland, who bore him seven children. He died at Royalton.

JOYCE, CHARLES H., of Rutland, son of Charles and Martha E. (Grist) Joyce, was born in Wherwell, England, Jan. 30, 1830. He came to this country with his parents in 1836, and settled in Waitsfield; worked on a farm and attended the district school, winters, until he was eighteen years old, when he left the farm and completed his education at the Waitsfield and Northfield Academies and at Newbury Seminary. He was a page in the Vermont House of Representatives three sessions, assistant librarian one year, and librarian one year. He taught school several terms, at the same time pursuing his legal studies under Hon. F. F. Merrill of Montpelier, and the late Col. F. V. Randall of Northfield. He was admitted to the Bar of Washington County in 1852, and commenced the practice of law at Northfield in 1855. In 1856 was elected states attorney of Washington County and re-elected in 1857. In 1861 he was appointed major of the 2d Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, the first three years' regiment to leave the state, and in June following he was promoted to lieutenant-colonel in the same regiment. He fought with his regiment from Bull Run to Fredericksburg. In January, 1863, he was compelled to resign his commission on account of a severe disability contracted during the campaign of 1861, removed to Rutland and resumed the practice of his profession. A Republican; represented Rutland in the Legislature 1869 and 1870, being speaker of the House the latter year; represented his district in Congress 1874-80. He was married Feb. 21, 1853, to Rouene Morris Randall of Northfield.

BARLOW, BRADLEY; Congressman 1879-81; born Fairfield, May 12, 1814; son of Col. Bradley and Deborah (Sherman) Barlow; educated in the common schools; was clerk in a store in Philadelphia, then succeeded his father in business at Fairfield, until he moved to St. Albans, in 1857, to become cashier of the bank there, later becoming president. In 1860 became interested in the overland stage business of the West, continuing twenty years and retiring with a fortune. Returning to Vermont he put $40,000 into the Welden House, St. Albans, and was largely interested in the Southeastern Railway of Canada and Northern Vermont, but at a critical time he was forced to the wall, drawing his bank down with him. Represented Fairfield in the Legislature 1845, '50, '51, and '52, and St. Albans in 1864 and '65; member state senate 1866 and '68; the constitutional conventions of 1843, '50, and '57. A Democrat up to the war, then a Republican; was county treasurer 1860 to '67; director and president Vermont and Canada R. R. and director of Central Vermont and other companies. In 1878 he was ambitious to go to Congress, but Gen. W. W. Grout received the nomination; a bolt was organized, and a convention held to endorse the nomination which had been given him by the Greenbackers, the bulk of the Democrats aiding in his support. Grout's election was defeated at the first trial, and Barlow was easily elected at the second, serving only one term. In 1887 married Caroline Farnsworth of Fairfax. He died Nov. 6, 1909.

BOLSTER, LEVI J., late of Barre. Business man. Born Winhall, Aug. 19, 1836; died at Barre, Dec. 22, 1908; son of Chapin and Rebecca (French) Bolster. His education consisted of a few winter terms in the district school. His early life was spent in Winhall; when a mere lad he was "bound out" to service, but when 17 years of age he had laid by $100 with which he purchased of his father the remaining years of his minority; as a farmer's helper he had worked for a time in Dummerston, and subsequently in Brattleboro. In 1861 he married Calista E.

Bolster of Barre, who survives him; they had no children. His first venture was traveling through Vermont on foot retailing sewing silk from house to house, and it was in this line he laid the foundation of his fortune; in 1860 he settled in Barre and entered into the wholesale end of the silk trade, investing his surplus earnings in real estate, in which his keen eye saw prospects of future development; retiring from the silk business, devoted his energies to real estate transactions, farming, establishing granite plants, and dealing in wood and coal on a large scale; among his valuable holdings late in life was a 300-acre farm on Barre Town hill, on which he had expended many thousands of dollars in buildings and roads. Although a staunch Republican, he never aspired to political honors; was a promoter and organizer of the People's National Bank of Barre, and one of its directors until his death. A man of sterling integrity and rugged honesty, and, although a member of no religious society, a generous contributor to the support of all good work, particularly to the Universalist Church. Mr. Bolster's life, from boyhood to rugged age, is an inspiration to those who come after him, and is an example of how much may be accomplished by close adherence to the rules of right living, frugality, sobriety, and a wholesome respect for the rights of others.

CHANDLER, ALBERT BROWN, Brooklyn, N. Y. Born Randolph, Aug. 20, 1840; youngest son of William Brown and Electa (Owen) Chandler. William Chandler, the progenitor in America of the Chandler family, came to Roxbury, Mass., in 1637. From his three sons, William, Thomas and John, were descended the New England branches of the family; the descendants including some of the most prominent men of their time. Among them were Senator Zachariah Chandler, of Michigan; Senator William E. Chandler, of New Hampshire; Commander Benjamin F. Chandler of the United States Navy; Professor Charles F. Chandler, of Columbia University; and the subject of this sketch, who is also a descendant of John Winthrop, the first governor of Massachusetts. Albert Brown Chandler was educated in the district school and in the academy of his native village, and spent his vacations in learning the arts of both printing and telegraphy. Mr. Chandler was married October 11, 1864, to Miss Marilla Eunice Stedman of West Randolph. Three children were born to them, one daughter, Florence, dying in childhood, and two sons, Albert Eckert and Willis Derwin. His wife Marilla died in September, 1907. In December, 1910, Mr. Chandler married Miss Mildred Vivian of New York City, a member of a most favorably known family of the South, who came to New York from Kansas City in 1907. He was appointed manager of the Western Union telegraph office at Bellaire, O., in 1858. In 1859 agent of the Cleveland & Pittsburgh Railroad at Manchester, opposite Pittsburg, remaining until May, 1863, when he was assigned to duty as cipher telegraph operator in the War Department at Washington, becoming one of the confidential telegraph operators of President Lincoln and Secretary Stanton. In October, 1863, in addition to these duties, he was made disbursing clerk for General Thomas T. Eckert, superintendent of Military Telegraph in the Department of the Potomac, visiting the armies in the field and becoming personally acquainted with principal military officers of the government. In August, 1866, before the general consolidation of the several telegraph interests in the United States into one company had become fully organized, he was made chief clerk in the office of General Superintendent of the Eastern Division and placed in charge of the transatlantic and Cuba cable traffic, which had just been inaugurated. In addition to these duties, he was, on the first of June, 1869, appointed superintendent of the Sixth District of the Eastern Division, and continued in these several positions until January, 1875, when he accepted the position of assistant general manager of the Atlantic & Pacific Telegraph Company, of which General Eckert had lately become president and general manager. He was subsequently appointed, successively, secretary, treasurer, director, and vice-president of that company, and in December, 1879, he succeeded General Eckert as president. After that company was combined with the Western Union Co. in 1881, he accepted the presidency of the Fuller Electrical Company, which was among the first to develop the arc system of electric lighting, remaining actively in that position until May, 1884. In December of that year he became counsel for the Postal Telegraph and Cable Company, and in June, 1865, he was appointed receiver of the property of that company. Through his efforts the company was reorganized, and early in 1886 he became its president and general manager, and also a member of the board of directors and of the executive committee and a vice-president of the Commercial Cable Company. After the construction of the Pacific Coast lines, he was made acting president of the Pacific Postal Telegraph Company, of which Mr. John W. Mackay was president. In March, 1887, he was elected a director, and soon after president, of the Commercial Telegraph Company. While under his management the property of this company was acquired by the Stock Exchange in 1890, and Mr. Chandler has ever since continued in charge of its operation under the direction of the Exchange. Was a member of the board of directors of the Brooklyn District Telegraph Co. and president of that company during the first three years of its existence. The large and commodious building of the Postal Telegraph Company at Broadway and Murray Street, New York, was erected under the supervision of Mr. Chandler, and has become a well established center of telegraphic communication. After forty-four years of active service, by his own wish, Mr. Chandler retired from the presidency of the company, which Mr. John W. Mackay then assumed, requesting that Mr. Chandler continue in close relations with him as chairman of the board of directors, which position he has ever since continued to occupy. He is a member of the board of directors of the Otis Elevator Company. He served as colonel and A. D. C. on the military staffs of Governors Woodbury and Grout of Vermont for four years, 1895 to 1898, inclusive. It has been said of him that he is a man of infinite patience and pains; that in every relation he has proved himself more than equal to the duties assigned him, honoring every trust by conscientious assiduity, and by the unfailing politeness, fidelity and thoughtful-ness with which he administered it; and that when he withdrew from active management of the Postal System he had the gratification of knowing that he was the only man who had ever built up a comprehensive and successful competitive system of telegraphs in the United States. May 16, 1896, at the National Electrical Exposition in New York, he sent a telegraph message, written by Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, a distance of 16,000 miles around the world, which was received and transcribed by Thomas A. Edison in New York, four minutes later, the entire circuit being composed of wires and cables belonging to the Postal Telegraph-Commercial Cable system. Elbert Hubbard must have had Col. Chandler in mind when he wrote: "Responsibilities gravitate to the person who can shoulder them; and power flows to the man who knows how." In political convictions Col. Chandler is a Republican. He has been a member of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church (known as Dr. Cuyler's) in Brooklyn since January, 1869, and is an attendant of Bethany Congregational Church in Randolph, in aid of which he gave, in 1907, Chandler Music Hall, which, with its adjoining Parish House, is one of the finest structures of the kind in New England. A full sketch of the life of Mr. Chandler would form an interesting chapter in the history of telegraphy in the United States. He is classed among telegraph people as one of its pioneers, having devoted more than fifty years of continuous service to that profession, occupied nearly every official position pertaining to it, been personally acquainted with nearly all the principal promoters, inventors, and officers who have brought that business to its present position of prime importance in the affairs of the world, and has participated in some of the most important movements in the transmission of messages of public interest, the development of business and in its organization, operation and expansion.

COLBURN, ZERAH, Norwich. Arithmetical prodigy, minister and educator. Born Cabot, Sept. 1, 1804; son of Abia and Elizabeth (Hill) Colburn. Educated at Westminster school, England; the Royal College, Paris; and the University of Vermont. In 1829 married Mary Hoyt of Hartford. Had five daughters and one son, Miss Jane Colburn of Concord, N. H., the only survivor. When six years old he was surprisingly gifted as an arithmetical calculator. Was exhibited in Vermont, and later went on an extended tour. At Hanover, N. H., President Wheelock of Dartmouth College offered to educate him. In Boston problems were answered sooner than could be done on paper. He found the number of seconds in 2,000 years, and the number of times a clock would strike in 2,000 years making 156 strokes each day. Told the number of kernels of corn in a field on being given the number of acres, rows, hills, ears and kernels on an ear. Is reported to have answered in four seconds the number of seconds in eleven years. He extracted square and cube roots with ease. His work on occasions of exhibition was done entirely by mental process. Some Bostonians talked of raising $5,000 for his education, but the plan fell through. In Philadelphia Rembrandt Peele painted a portrait of him. Visited Washington, and on the way back with considerable money derived from exhibitions, the father, by a timely discovery, averted a plan to rob him at a New York inn. Returning to Vermont, stayed a brief time, left $500 with his wife, and then traveled in other states. In 1812 they began a voyage of 38 days to England, with letters of introduction from ex-Gov. Gerry of Massachusetts, Hon. Rufus King and others. The boy's reputation had preceded him. Many wished to see for themselves. The philanthropist, Wm. Wilberforce, showed a personal interest in his moral welfare. Many persons of rank and learning called to see him. Among them were the Bishop of Oxford, the Duke of Gloucester, the Earl of Aberdeen, the Princess Charlotte with her tutor, and Sir Humphrey Davy. He gave public exhibitions. Asked to square 888.888, he gave the correct result in twelve figures, and then multiplied this product by 49. His most remarkable power seemed to be in factoring. He would give all the factors of some large numbers. Asked to factor 36.083 he at once said it was a prime number. Given a certain number of ten figures, which had baffled some good mathematicians, he found mentally the only two factors which it had, being 641 and 6.700.417. His calculations combined great rapidity, accuracy, peculiar methods, unflinching memory and an intuitive power in some operations, which he could not impart or explain. Sometimes, when doing his most difficult tasks, he, like the Royalton boy prodigy, Truman H. Safford, would go through bodily contortions, though not himself realizing any mental strain. In visits to Scotland and Ireland men of science were attracted. In 1814 a private tutor was engaged. Taken from London to Paris, a French tutor was employed for a few months. The boy was examined before members of the French Institute, the astronomer, La Place, being present. Dr. Gall, the phrenologist, desired to make a plaster cast of his face. Count Guizot mentioned him with commendation in his Annals of Education. Washington Irving, then in Paris, proved to be a good friend, and promoted his education and advancement. He was admitted to the Royal College May 30, 1815. Napoleon desired to meet him, but the battle of Waterloo prevented. In 1816 Zerah's father took him back to London. There their livelihood had been obtained partly from public exhibitions, the sale of engraved portraits and the patronage of wealthy people. Advance subscriptions had also been obtained for a proposed memoir of the boy and his achievements. Their pecuniary condition on their return was precarious; but fortunately they made the acquaintance of the good and generous Earl of Bristol, who proved to be one of the best friends Zerah ever had. He sent him to the old Westminster school with a view to give him a full course. He remained there three years, and his standing was excellent. He had a tutor for two vacations. He quit the school May, 1819, very grateful for what had been done for him, but unwilling to accept a new plan of the Earl to continue his education under a tutor, whom he had considered harsh and unreasonable. He next studied for the stage, and acted in some plays. In 1821-2 he was a school teacher. In 1823 he studied under Dr. Thomas Young, secretary of the Board of Longitude; became his associate in 1824, and made astronomical calculations, a position which afforded scope for the useful exercise of his special talent. Soon thereafter his father died, and the young man sailed for New York, after an absence of more than 12 years. On meeting his mother at Cabot they did not know one another. In January, 1823, he went to Burlington, where he received pupils in French, and was a student in the University of Vermont; became a member of the Methodist Church, and preached in Vermont towns about nine years. He is said to have been a preacher of eloquence, depth and power. In 1835 he became professor of languages in Norwich University, in which occupation his last years were spent. He died of consumption, March 2, 1839, and was buried in Norwich Centre. He has often been confounded with Warren Colburn (1793-1833), the author of the well-known "Intellectual Arithmetic." They are not known to have been related. Zerah Colburn never published an arithmetic, though in his autobiography (Springfield, Mass., 1833) he made known in part his methods. Years after his public demonstrations he declared that his faculty in numbers never left him, though requiring more time when out of practice. He was an honorary member of the Society of United Fraternity of Dartmouth College. [Contributed by Rev. Franklin W. Bartlett, D. D., Rockport, Mass.]

KELLOGG, WILLIAM PITT, Washington, D. C. Lawyer, soldier, statesman. Born Orwell, Dec. 8, 1830; son of Rev. Sherman Kellogg, a well-known Congregational clergyman located for many years at Montpelier. His grandfather, Saxton Kellogg, married Sallie Fuller, a descendant of Benjamin Franklin, and when quite young removed from Connecticut to Vermont. Educated at Norwich University. In 1865 married Mary E. Wills of Canton, Ill.; they have no children. In 1848 his father removed to Peoria, Ill., to take charge of a church, where he died a short time after. Thrown on his own resources, in the winters he taught school and in the summers read law with E. G. Johnson, himself a Vermonter and a warm friend of Abraham Lincoln. Admitted to the bar in 1852 and practiced in Fulton County, where he met Mr. Lincoln, who often attended court at Lewiston, the county seat. In 1856 was chosen by the party then known as the Anti-Nebraska party as delegate from Fulton County to the Bloomington Convention held May 29, 1856, which organized the Republican party of Illinois; was chairman of his delegation, Mr. Lincoln being chairman of the delegation from Sangamon County. In the same year was a candidate on the Lincoln legislative ticket in Fulton County. In 1860 chosen a Lincoln presidential elector, and is the only one of the Illinois presidential electors of that year now living. Shortly after President Lincoln's inauguration in 1861 he was appointed chief justice of Nebraska. In July, 1861, at request of Governor Yates, returned to Illinois and recruited a regiment of cavalry; was given six months' leave of absence at the instance of President Lincoln, and returned to Illinois. He raised what was known as the 7th Illinois Cavalry, composed of sons of farmers; was commissioned colonel of the regiment by the governor and given six months' leave of absence from time to time. Reported to General Grant at Cairo, who detailed him to command the post at Cape Girardeau, Mo.; commanded this post for four months, and later served with General Pope at the capture of Fort Thompson and Island No. 10; went with Pope to Farmington and Corinth, and, after the battle of Corinth, was stricken with typhoid fever and for a long time a confirmed invalid. Resigning, he returned to Nebraska and resumed his duties as chief justice of that territory. In January, 1863, accompanied Governor Yates to General Grant's headquarters in front of Vicksburg, and on Feb. 16, 1863 was selected by General Grant to carry important papers to President Lincoln at Washington. The authority given him was written by General Grant and is highly cherished by Judge Kellogg. Wednesday evening, April 12, 1865, he had an interview with President Lincoln at the White House who tendered him the office of collector of customs at New Orleans and urged him to accept the position. He was appointed April 13, 1865, his commission bearing that date; the following day, April 14, President Lincoln was assassinated. Served as collector of customs until July, 1868, when he was elected U. S. senator from Louisiana, serving from July, 1868, to Nov. 1, 1872, when he resigned to become a candidate for governor on the Republican ticket. He was elected and served as governor of Louisiana from Jan. 5, 1873, to Jan. 5, 1877. During the first two years of his administration as governor of Louisiana there was a very acrimonious struggle with an organization known as the White League, until Congress by joint resolution recognized him as both de facto and de jure governor. Subsequently Senator George F. Hoar, of Massachusetts, was chairman of the joint committee of the two houses of Congress sent to investigate the condition of affairs in Louisiana. In a speech in the U. S. Senate referring to Governor Kellogg Senator Hoar said: "This man shows the civil commissions of Abraham Lincoln and the register of brave and honorable military service in the cause of the union. Some years ago, in the performance of a duty assigned me by the House of Representatives, I carefully investigated the complaints against his administration as governor of Louisiana. I declare it my belief that for wisdom, energy, and integrity it is a conspicuous and honorable exception. He found her credit degraded, and left it strong; he found her treasury empty and bankrupt, and left it with a surplus." (Forty-sixth Congress, Second Sess. P. 3161.) At the end of his term as governor, was re-elected to U. S. Senate, serving until March 3, 1883; afterwards elected to the House of Representatives of the 48th Congress from the 3rd Congressional District of Louisiana, and at the expiration of his term in the House retired from active politics. Was delegate-at-large from Louisiana to the national convention of 1868 which nominated General Grant, and one of the 306 delegates who voted for him to the end at the national convention of 1880; was a delegate-at-large from Louisiana to every Republican national convention up to and including that of 1896, which nominated McKinley at St. Louis. Governor Kellogg is passing his declining years with his invalid wife at The Highlands, one of Washington's beautiful apartment houses, and where he has large real estate interests.

Kendall a half interest in the Kendall Spavin Cure business, and soon after Olin Merrill and M. P. Perley became partners in the concern, the late Dr. B. J. Kendall Co., Mr. Marsh later becoming its president, a position which he held until his death; he also conducted a large feed and mill business. Enlisted in Co. K, 13th Vermont Volunteers, at Highgate, Sept. 11, 1862, and was unanimously elected second lieutenant of the company; Dec. 31, 1862, after two weeks' illness from typhoid fever, was removed to hospital at Fairfax Court House, Va., remaining until Jan. 20, 1863; following a long march to camp, Lieutenant Marsh suffered a relapse, and an attack of cerebro-spinal meningitis carried him near to death; Feb. 5th he was removed to the home of Mrs. Wilcoxon, where he recovered sufficiently to be removed to his home, resigning Feb. 17, 1863. Thirty years later he had succeeded in finding his old nurse, who had again married and moved to another state, and was then in destitute circumstances; annually until her death, General Marsh paid a visit to his benefactress, paying all her bills and making her last days comfortable, and at her death, July 29, 1902, he defrayed the expense of her illness and funeral charges. At the 22nd annual reunion of the 13th Regiment, held at Franklin, Sept. 8, 1910, was dedicated a beautiful soldiers' monument, the gift to his native town of General Marsh. In 1910 the Vermont Legislature changed the name of Franklin Pond to Lake Carmi, in appreciation of his valued services as a citizen. Was a Republican; represented Franklin in Legislature 1878-9; senator from Franklin County 1886; judge advocate general on the staff of Governor Barstow; president 13th Vermont Regiment Association, later becoming one of the "self-appointed committee of three" of the regiment, so called because they assumed the initiative in furthering the interests of the association. In religious belief an Episcopalian, and senior warden of the church; member Lincoln Lodge No. 78, F. & A. M.; and Vermont Commandery of the Loyal Legion.

MARTIN, JAMES LOREN, Brattleboro. United States district judge for the District of Vermont. Born Landgrove, Sept. 13, 1846; fourth son of James and Lucy (Gray) Martin. Brought up on the farm, and at the age of fourteen was presented with twenty dollars and control of his time thenceforward. He paid his expenses at school by working on farms by the month, doing piece work in chair factories, laying wall by the rod, chopping wood and peeling bark by the cord, carrying on sugar lots "at the halves" and clearing land. His education in the public schools was supplemented by a course at South Londonderry Academy and Marlow (N. H.) Academy, in which latter institution he later became a teacher. He also taught in the public schools of Londonderry and Winhall for about six years. In 1869 married Delia E., daughter of Lewis and Mary (Aiken) Howard, who died in 1881; they had three children, none of whom survive. In 1884 married Jessie Lillie, daughter of Capt. Edward and Susan (Lillie) Dewey of Montpelier; they have three daughters, Margaret Susan, Helen Ruth, and Katharine Gray. In 1867 he became a law student of Judge H. H. Wheeler and pursued his legal studies as time and opportunity permitted. The following year he went to law school in Albany, N. Y., from which he graduated in May, 1869, and was admitted to the Bennington County Bar the following month. He practiced law in Londonderry from that time until January, 1882, when he moved to Brattleboro, where he continued the practice of law until he was appointed United States judge in October, 1906. Appointed United States attorney by President McKinley in 1898, re-appointed by President Roosevelt in 1902, and again in 1906, and was serving his third term when appointed United States judge. It will be observed that he studied law with Judge Wheeler, later was United States attorney for the District of Vermont where Judge Wheeler was the presiding judge, and at Judge Wheeler's decease succeeded him on the bench. For about 18 years has been director Vermont Mutual Fire Insurance Co.; director American Fidelity Co. since its organization; director National Life Insurance Co. many years; member Brattleboro school board 11 years, and still on the board; has been for about 19 years member of firm of Holden & Martin, lumber dealers, Brattleboro. Judge Martin's political career began with his election to the Legislature as representative from Londonderry in 1874, which town he represented for the next succeeding ten years, the last six years of which he was speaker of the house of representatives. In 1892 he represented Brattleboro in the Legislature, declining to be a candidate for speaker, but served as chairman of the judiciary committee and second on the ways and means committee. Was states attorney for Windham County 1874-6; commissioner of taxes under Governor Dillingham 1888-90, and under Governor Fuller 1892-4. Judge Martin has presided at many important trials since his appointment as United States judge, among them being the sugar cases, so-called. In the winter of 1907 there came to light frauds by the sugar trust against the government on a scale bigger than any frauds on the revenue since the whiskey frauds of a generation ago. The government first secured restitution of over $2,000,000 and then proceeded criminally against all the living participants in the crime, who reached from dock-laborers, who worked the physical fraud, up to Charles R.

Heike, the secretary and treasurer of the sugar trust. The trial of these cases had national importance, and focused national attention upon Judge Martin. The cases involved complex issues which were hotly contested by able counsel, and the trials were of long duration. Convictions were secured against all defendants (except as to one, about whom the jury disagreed). But an even more strikingly important fact, in the history of important criminal prosecutions in this country, is that all the convictions in the cases presided over by Judge Martin were sustained on appeal.

MARTIN, LEWIS DAMON, Barre. Physician. Born Williamstown, July 10, 1868; son of Herbert P. and Maria S. (Lewis) Martin. Educated at the public schools, Montpelier Seminary, and American School of Osteopathy. In 1893 married Olive A. Farnham of Williamstown; they have three sons and one daughter, Raymond Lewis, Hildreth Farnham, Horace Proctor, and Victoria Olive. Taught school in Barre, Vt., and Wyand, Ill. In 1890 Martin & Farnham introduced the practice of dehorning cattle in Vermont, and dehorned by the Haaff method several thousand head. In 1897 took up the study of osteopathy at Kirksville, Mo.; after graduation located in Barre, where he has been in practice 12 years. Is a Republican. In 1902 elected member of the board of trustees of Montpelier Seminary for a term of four years, has been re-elected for a similar term twice since; has held the office of president and secretary of the Vermont State Osteopathic Association, and is serving his second term as secretary of the Vermont State Board of Osteopathic Examination and Registration. PROUTY, CHARLES AZRO, Newport. Chairman Interstate Commerce Commission. Born Newport, Oct. 9, 1853; eldest son of John Azro and Hannah B. (Lamb) Prouty. He received his early education at Derby Academy and afterwards took the degree of A. B. in 1875 at Dartmouth College. During his college career he won several prizes for essays on different subjects and graduated at the head of his class. After graduating from college he took up work as assistant to Prof. S. P. Langley, of the Allegheny Observatory, at Pittsburgh, Pa. On account of ill-health was compelled to give up his work there and return to Vermont in the fall of 1876, taking up the study of the law in his home town and being admitted to the Bar of Vermont in 1877. The same year he married Abbie Davis of Lyndonville, and began the practice of the law. Finding it impossible to maintain himself by his profession, he taught school for several years, but finally returned to the law in 1882. His second venture was more successful than his first and he soon became one of the most prominent figures of the legal fraternity in the state, being among other things attorney for the Central Vermont Railroad and general counsel for the Rutland Railroad. From 1888 to 1896 he reported the decisions of the Supreme Court of Vermont. He is probably best known for his work on the Interstate Commerce Commission, to which he was appointed in December, 1896. Federal regulation of railroads had not gone very far at that time and Mr. Prouty began by a series of addresses and newspaper articles to point out to the people wherein the act to regulate commerce was defective and in need of amendment. It has been modified from year to year until at the present time the commission is considered to be one of the most powerful and helpful bodies in the entire country. Mr. Prouty, perhaps more than any other one man in this country, is responsible for the present condition of this act, he having been identified with all the various amendments as well as all of the important cases which have been heard and decided by that tribunal. His opinions are famous for their breadth and thought and regard for all interests. He is a Republican; served as delegate to the Republican national convention in 1896, and has represented his home town in the state Legislature. He is also a member of the Delta Kappa Epsilon Fraternity and of various clubs and associations throughout the country. He is one of the Vermonters who, having attained a national reputation, still resides in Vermont. In the last fifteen years he has declined many flattering offers to change his domicile, but always insists that the Green Mountain State is a good place to live in as well as to emigrate from. In his public addresses he frequently refers to his home on the banks of Lake Memphremagog as the one spot where he desires to spend his declining years.

STRONG, FRANCIS MILES, Vergennes. Inventor, retired farmer. Born Pittsford, Sept. 16, 1829; son of Frederick Ross and Sophronia (Chaffee) Strong. Richard Strong, the founder of the family in England, was born in the County of Caernarvon, 1561; died at Somersetshire, Eng., 1613, leaving a son John and a daughter Eleanor. John was born at Taunton in 1605, and sailed to this country March 20, 1630, in company with 140 others in the ship "Mary and John" (Capt. Squeb), arriving at Nantasket, Mass., (Hull), after a passage of more than 75 days, on Sunday, May 30, 1630. They settled in Dorchester; in 1659 John Strong removed to Northampton, Mass., where he lived 40 years; followed trade of tanner; owned 200 acres of land, and obtained the title of Elder John Strong. In December, 1630, married Abigail Ford of Dorchester, a passenger with him from England; she died 1688, the mother of 16 children; John Strong died 1689, aged 94 years. Francis Miles Strong, the subject of this sketch, is the eighth generation descending from Elder John Strong in the following line: John, Jedediah, Preserve, Noah, Simeon, Jonathan, and Frederick Ross Strong. The latter was born in Salisbury, Oct. 13, 1804; in 1826 married Sophronia Chaffee of Pittsford, a descendant of an English family of about the same period, which settled at Rehoboth, R. I. (see genealogy of the Chaffee family); she died at Rockford, Ia., 1896; Frederick Ross Strong died at Brandon 1897. Francis Miles Strong was a pupil in the public schools of Forestdale; at age of 13 was apprenticed as an iron moulder; at age of 16 went to New York and later to Brockville, Can., where he worked as a journeyman; after that time worked in Troy, Albany and Rochester, N. Y., had charge of foundry at Franklin and Chattanooga, Tenn.; in 1847 sailed from New York to New Orleans, thence by boat to Cincinnati, O., where he became foreman of the Fulton foundry. In 1848 married Sarah Marinda Clark, daughter of James and Emily (Blanchard) Clark of Cincinnati; they had three children, Herman Charles and Herbert William, twins; and Frances Caroline, born at Brandon, Sept. 16, 1861; Herman died Kansas City, Mo., Aug. 7, 1861; Herbert William died in Massachusetts in 1908; Frances Caroline married David

Simmons at Somerset, Mass.; she died at Basin Harbor, Nov. 19, 1899, leaving two children, Sarah Strong Simmons (Mrs. C. Ray Brittell of Weybridge), who died Sept. 27, 1906, at the birth of twin daughters who survive her. Frank E. Simmons married Clara Howard of Westport, N. Y.; they have two children, Elizabeth and Howard. For his second wife Mr. Strong married, July 10, 1893, Ardelia Augusta Beach, only daughter of Allen P. Beach of West Ferrisburg. She died at Basin Harbor at her home, Aug. 5, 1909. Mr. Strong was employed as a journeyman iron moulder at St. Albans and Rutland; later went to Vergennes, where he had charge of the foundry for the Vergennes Iron Co. In 1852, while at Vergennes, in connection with Thomas Ross, then a minor and at work for his father, whom Mr. Strong paid for his services, a patent was issued jointly to Francis M. Strong and Thomas Ross for platform scales bearing date Jan. 15, 1856, and subsequently eight other patents were granted to Strong and Ross on platform scales. Among the first scales manufactured was one for the Morris Canal and Banking Co. of New Jersey, having a capacity of 400 tons, with a platform 30x70 feet, and set on an incline; this scale remained in use upwards of 25 years, or until the canal was superseded by the railroad. While Mr. Ross was erecting this scale Mr. Strong took the model to John Howe, Jr., at Brandon, who advanced $2,000 on account of royalties to enable Strong and Ross to pay their liabilities, and made an arrangement by which Strong and Ross should be employed for the term of five years for a salary and a royalty on all scales sold. After remaining with Mr. Howe six years, the remainder of the life of the patent was sold to him for $15,000, Strong and Ross each receiving $7,500 and the royalties then due. More capital was required for the business, which Mr. Howe secured, and the patents were put into the deal a few days later for $75,000. When the scales were first introduced they were known as Strong and Ross' patents, manufactured by John Howe, Jr., of Brandon. About this time Mr. Howe's brother, Frank E., opened a warehouse in New York, and from that time forward the business was known, as it is now known, as the Howe Scale Co. The business having outgrown its location at Brandon, was removed to Rutland, where it has been increased to require 17 acres of land for buildings and stock, and is now one of Vermont's leading industries. This scale, which had its inception in the little iron foundry at Vergennes, is accepted by all civilized nations as a standard of weights, and is likely so to continue as long as weight is the measure of values. After a final disposition of his interests to Mr. Howe, Mr. Strong went to Vergennes and purchased the Bradbury flouring mill, which he operated for five years; he then became interested in the Vergennes Water Power Co., and other properties with water power, and was later in the foundry and machine business and carriage wood work. Mr. Strong is a Republican, and an ardent temperance man. The accompanying picture was taken on his 82nd birthday.

WILLARD, HENRY AUGUSTUS, late of Washington, D. C. Born Westminster, May 14, 1822; died in Walpole, N. H., Dec. 4, 1909; son of Joseph and Susan Dorr (Clapp) Willard, and a direct descendant of Maj. Simon Willard, who came from Horsemonden, Kent, England, about 1634. As a lad he worked on his father's farm and attended school at the Walpole Academy. In 1855 married Sarah Bradley Kellogg of Westminster; they have one son, Henry Kellogg Willard. At the age of 16 was employed as clerk in a country store at Bellows Falls, and for a time in Chase's hotel, Brattleboro, later going to Troy, N. Y., where he secured a position on the Troy & New York Hudson River line steamers; was steward for a time on the steamer Niagara; by his business-like methods and courteous manner made many influential friends; was intrusted with the care of large sums of money as caretaker and transfer agent from Troy people to New York banks; in 1847 went to Washington, D. C., and opened the City Hotel, soon after making arrangements to purchase the property; changed the name to the Willard Hotel; was sole owner and proprietor until 1853, when he took as co-partner his brother, Joseph C.; the hotel in those days was the leading hotel in Washington, and was the resort and stopping-place of many senators, members of Congress, diplomats, and statesmen; in 1861 entertained President Lincoln, on his way to Washington for his first inauguration. Mr. Willard was a loyal supporter of the Union cause during the Civil War; at one time, when it seemed as if the capital would be taken by the Confederates, the flag on the Willard Hotel was the only one flying in Washington, other than those on the government buildings. In 1861 the Messrs. Willard leased the Willard Hotel; later, in 1892, Henry A. Willard sold his half interest to his brother, the late Joseph C. Willard. He purchased a farm about one mile from the city of Hudson, N. Y., where he and his family made their summer home two years, 1865-7; in 1873 built the residence at 1333 K St., Washington, N. W., where he lived 36 years. In 1867 organized the National Savings Bank, now the National Savings and Trust Co., of Washington, D. C., and was its first president. In all matters relating to the improvements and building of modern Washington, Mr. Willard took an active interest; was appointed by President Grant vice-president of the board of public works, and co-operated with his friend, Gov. Alexander R. Shepherd, in the wonderful work which that board did under Shepherd's masterful leadership in making a new Washington, now the most beautiful city in America; from 1873-89 was president of the Columbia Street Railroad; in 1881 organized the Columbia Fire Insurance Co., which, during the 11 years of his management, did a phenomenal business, earning a surplus of more than $100,000; for many years up to 1897 was vice-president of the National Metropolitan Bank. Was a Unitarian; the largest individual contributor, and chairman of the board of trustees, in the building of All Souls' Church, Washington; was especially interested in the founding of the Garfield Memorial Hospital, and up to the time of his death its vice-president; was for many years an active member of the Vermont State Association of the District of Columbia, and was one of its honorary vice-presidents at the time of his death; one of the directors of the American Security and Trust Co. of Washington; member of the Washington Monument Society; and vice-president of the Association of the Oldest Inhabitants of the District of Columbia.

WILLIAMS, EDWARD HIGGINSON. In practice of medicine at Proctorsville and Northfield; civil engineer and superintendent of railroads at Lachine, Canada; Adrian, Mich; Laporte, Ind.; Janesville, Wis.; Chicago and Cottage Hill (now Elmhurst), Ill.; and Altoona, Penn. Locomotive builder at Philadelphia and Rosemont, Penn. Born at Woodstock, June 1, 1824; son of Hon. Norman and Mary Ann Wentworth (Brown) Williams. Educated at home where he studied civil engineering under Hosea Doton, Esq., and afterwards at the University of Michigan, then at Pontiac, where his uncle, Rev. Dr. George Palmer Williams, was head of the budding university. His engineering practice was obtained in the corps of Hon. John N. Berrian and Dr. Douglas Houghton, then constructing the Michigan Central Railroad (1844). An attack of what was thought to be asthma, but years afterwards proved to be a beech-nut burr lodged in the vocal chords, compelled him to seek a life of less violent exertion, and he graduated at the Vermont Medical College at Woodstock, connected with Middlebury College, in 1846. While in practice at Proctorsville he successfully treated a foreman of one of the gangs on the Rutland Railroad who had a three foot tamping bar blown through his head. As by choice a civil engineer he was interested in the construction of the road, and afterwards while at Northfield he became acquainted with Col. Moore and the minutiae of running the (then) Vermont Central Railroad. In 1851 his vocal trouble left him and he began his life as an engineer at Lachine, Canada. From 1854 till 1865 he was connected with the pioneer road to the west. His last work was the extending the Galena & Chicago Union R. R. (now part of the Northwestern system) across Iowa. During this time he, with Isaac Howe, his assistant superintendent, organized the first Weather Bureau in the world. All the agents on the extensive system in Iowa, Wisconsin and Illinois made daily reports of the state of the weather, barometer, etc., so that the Galena road by doubling engines or laying off on sidings, had fewer trains stalled in Winter than any of the roads from Chicago. Among other things now in general use are the numbering of bridges, distance signs, difference in tone of whistles for passenger and freight, originated by Dr. Williams. In 1870 he resigned the position of general superintendent of the Pennsylvania Railroad for a partnership in the Baldwin Locomotive Works. The works were forty years old and had made between three and four hundred engines. When Dr. Williams died they were turning out one thousand a year. He married at Woodstock, June 15, 1848, Cornelia Bailey, youngest daughter of Lieut. (U. S. A.) John A. and Sarah (Bailey) Pratt. Children, Edward Higginson, (see sketch); William (deceased); Anna, married Wm. F. Dreer of Philadelphia. Dr. Williams found his knowledge of medicine of great value and kept his surgical instruments ready for use, so that when railroad accidents occurred he could attend to the wounded as well as clear away the wreck. The last instance of his surgical work was after a collision in Egypt, between Suez and Alexandria, when he was returning from India. In the interests of his partnership he foresaw that the periodic panics in the business world would cause stoppage of work,—as after the failure of Jay Cooke,—if only American orders were secured. He then began a succession of trips around the world visiting a number of times every country using locomotives in Central and South America, Europe, Asia and Australia. He thus built up a world-wide business and formed a world-wide acquaintance. As a memorial of his son William he gave the science building for Carlton (Minn.) College and erected a sixteen-inch telescope. Besides some smaller gifts to the University of Vermont, of which he was an honorary alumnus, he gave a science building which he fully equipped at a cost of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, as a memorial to his wife. He gave largely to other institutions. In 1884 he erected of ornamental Vermont stones a public library on the Woodstock homestead as a memorial to his parents, and fully endowed it so that it is self supporting. He presented four thousand volumes of standard authors as a beginning. The year of his death (1899) saw the beginning of an extension to the building and the entire reorganization of the stack room, so that it can hold 25,000 volumes and by a second tier of stacks can double the capacity. At present there are over 16,000 volumes offered freely to the community. He was a member of the Union League in Chicago from its beginning and of the Union League of Philadelphia; of the American Society of Civil Engineers; of the Manufacturers and other clubs. In 1861 he built the first anthracite burning locomotive in Chicago, which now, the "Dr. Williams," is running on the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad. In 1877 he was elected a member of the Swedish Royal Society and created by the king a Knight of the Order of the North Star. In 1879 on the unanimous petition of the American exhibitors to the International Exhibition at Sydney N. S. W., he was appointed by the president, United States commissioner in charge of exhibits, and received from the government of New South Wales both bronze and silver medals "for services." He died at Santa Barbara, Cal., Dec. 21, 1899.

SONS OF VERMONT

The sun shines nowhere quite so bright
As up in old Vermont;
The snow lies nowhere quite so white
As up in old Vermont;
And when a native's time shall come to die
He longs to go back, and there to lie
Close up where the mountains meet the sky,
In little, old Vermont.
